AN HITUIES DURING THE BATTLE. AND THE BATTLES PROGRESS. SPICING THE GUIN ... A FIREDE ABBAULT AND ITS ON SEQUETICES .. ".. "

During the time of the awful massacre at the spot near Vantura the real and bravery of all the child courts, dead or surviving had not escaped the notice of the brave leaders, themselves, and Angeline Jennings had named them in her official report as girl and boyscout heroies and heroines who had distinguished themselves with unusual counge. During a slight hull in the morning that he are the dismounted and

"My brave friends" she maid when they finally presented themselves, and had er request seated themselves on two boxes which served as chairs "First I am at her request seated themselves on two boxes which served as chairs what I am going to say to you mind, I express no wish even of the elighbest. I simply state that genoral Vivian requires two men officers for a service of extreme danger, but no one is compelled, and therefore because of the peril of the adventure no one yellds for it lie wants to send a mossage to general sladerlinia, and he's about ten miles from unlone of the officers whom I had wished to select an disguise properly, and those who could disguise decline to go, saying they're not afraid of any adventure, but don't believe in suide. Therefore it seems to be among some of as that I must try, including even myself, for I and no one to yo, where I won't go myself. The regard this is requested is not to see how it comes that the enemy is progressing or losing, it is because gonoral Vivian has recieved a meagage, that Violet, and her eleters have failed to get within flifty miles of faximilian, as dreadful forcet fires of incomprehensible size and try but their vary and the they have returned, and are in Hansons army now. I have not the slightest to accompany me for the communications we wish to established with them to warm them not to come here during this dreadful battler. On the first place you that I have very often passed, while in disguise as all sorts of enemy stouts, and in the second our figures in disguises being decidedly gladelinian somewhat elight, and tridge the height you will attain, render your disguises for less dary to be detected than that of a full grown man or woman would be. The general often has said, "us this tren goods are the head of the army, as we can do anything that not the bravest coldier poy or agent or police or detective can accomplished, and her sisters to general vivians. You understand decided than that of a full grown man or woman would be. The general often meaning to the one of the greatest peril.

I cannot so wall intrust the mission to any simple boy or gir lecout sclose, because they may not be so disti going to say to you mind, I express no wish even of the elightest. I simply Mot put on haper the warnings to Violet, and her differed i wish conveyed and if the possible however faithful he or she may be, that he or she might if arrested and threatened with death, be compelled to reveal the message with which he is charged because there could be no help toblit. I see by your faces what your answer is about to be, but I will not have it now. So first to Concrat Vivian. Tell him exactly what I have teld you, and then send me the answer if he declines to part with you what I see is your own inclination, to his natural agriculty, you will not fall in the very least from the high position you and all your surviving followers stand in my regard. It does not seem to be any such a dangerous business as those we have gone through for the last thing they would look for is Christian refugees mains their way from St Ethelreda tward Lebanon at present. Angeline plones went through many experiences and got through them all, and I me sure the cland-links are looking out ten timen as sharp to prevent people getting out, as to prevent any one getting in. To reach general stan Staterlinias army would seem easily enough."
"Well her about you Certude?"

"Well hor about you Cortade!"

"I reallly do not believe Uncle"she answered, "That the danger of detect in he really great---certainly nothing like what i' may be fore. They returned in one half an how, or rather a little sconer, angeline angeline Jennings appeared her armest satisfaction when they told her of general Vivians consent to their going through the adventure.

"I understand from renoval vivian"she said addressing Radcliffe, "That you are one of our best and most frames said and ressain sples ever recorded for all believe you are a boy. I have deferred telling you that on the day of my first acquantance with you I sent your name home beginning that the Princesses would but you in a higher commission. Yet they notified me your commission is as high as one could ever be given you for your age. You are supposed to be the highest in a uperforehip than any of us, and never said a word or never exercized any aurthority whatever your name has often a word or never exercized any authority whatever low name has often appeared he such and I wondowed. There are only two ensigns in our regiment of boy-couts, and you need to fill one of them wacancies. I will do the same for you "Hidred" she said turning to the girlscout who had remained in her headquarters, now off duty because of her wounds "if you desire to give up your spying qualities, and take to us in general."

"I'm afraid I couldn't do that. "said Hidred laughing. "I can't accept anything without the permission of Jennie vivian as I really am under

"You've got a higher commission than I thought livertheless I have alredy already sent down a report by wireless to Empetor Vivian of your burve conduct and of your good gardianship of little "Galmity Jane"s we call her "and as the army of lansons may come up to us before long you will be with Violet, and her sisters again before long... How for your instructions. You are to inform general Sader link, he is incommand since the death of general Polander of the Vivian Girls intending to come here, and have him signal with his recret wireless to them not to go shead untill all is quiet all Even though now general Halated is on the point of endeavoring to push forward other troops to general Julio Benligans Bescue, he has no hope the surface of any second to the commentating, and svery step of the way will be most departedly contested. Too general Halated must be used to the condentrating, and svery step of the way will be most departedly contested. Too general Halated must be allowed and ment of hold that while he enemy resite later ones stabled in the enemy to though any to hold that while he enemy resite later ones stabled in the order of the hold that while he enemy resite later ones stabled in the own positions. I may say that I have no hope of seeing general Halated doing this till he is largely reinforced pill by starting the much and standing constantly on the offensive will force the enemy to retain a large force on the road and other points to oppose him and will so far relieve the remining a marmia assalling lines from some of the presence from the resistance of its foes. But here's the importance of your message. Did the enemy /now the nearness of Hansons acmy, they would not have dared engage general Vivian, for Hansons has moved aga very hour if possible I leave it to you to arrange nour discusses I will done mine, and have ordered the guide to be at your the as headquarters at ten this morning no that you can be ready by that time you can get well away before the battle agreeds too much along the whole christian line.

There is again! I heat four miles up the Vantura river, that the guide said he had crossed the river in, he hid! In some bushes, so you are can erose with re without any difficulty, and over if Clandelinians do catch us on crossing, our story or our manners and acts showing we are Clandellinians will lace master....

Upontheu their return to their our tent, the they found their friends on commades, Himpis and Jane, and two or three other grouts most accustomed to the habits of glandelirium boy and girlscouts, and all appliances for disgules. First the two ate a hearty morning meal, then they stripped, and were aponged withdedine from head to foot, both were then dreamed in bloodt he could not resist a motion of repugnance as the foul rags were applied to "Nature Forth head anymenty of Glandelinian plaster and bandages placed next "him" Both had a quanity of Glandelinian plaster and banduges placed next to the slin in case subjection should fall upon them and the outside bantages be removed by a Glandelinian a doctor to see if wounds realtly existed, and be smoved by a Clandelinian a doctor to see if vounds realily existed, and haddliffs was given a gorl of tox, with which to fill her mouth and swell out how chee cand list to give the appearance which would naturally arise from a severe wound in theylaw. Caste forms were painted in on their forehead, and their disguisse was pronounced to be absolutely perfect to the eye.Both were barefooted, as Clandelin in boy and girlncouts never trayel in the weighterful boots if they can avoid it, and only then they would in winter. These they we term to Ameline Jennings tent, and were surprised to see the control of the course for the moment it was she and benear wirl standing there. Forgetting for the moment it was she and believing she are a ref see escaped from the enemy Certrude said;

"How in the world child did you get here. Come. You must be hungry." she glanced at her watch, and then said "she it we no time. Then turning to a boy he said;

bey he said;

"Take this poor girl, and see that she is properly clothed, and give her somet ing to set these a refuset."

"You are not not trying to jo a are you. "said the boy with a smile. "To take not her disguise herself just a moment ago. Don't you remember your proposition with her. That's Angeline Jennings waiting for you to start "the net."

"Gond gosh"said Budcliffe. "You sure fooled us Miss Jennings. But let's start. We're a little late already."

At the appointed time the guide arrived with Angeline Johns. In and he was an intelligent looking man in a country dressne of glandelinia. He examined the four girl tavelors and pronounced himself perfectly satisfied with with their appearance. Outside the tent six horses were in readiness.

General Vivian and his two chief staff generals mounted on three, the obters were for the travelers and with a hearty good bye to their other others were for the travelers and with a hearty good bye to their other friends in the secret, the party started Loss than a quarter of an hours I st riding brought them to the place where the boat was concealed in the whee, and with a tender farewell from general Vivian their Uncle, and t whee, are with a tender farewell from general vivian their once, and a hearty good bye from all their surviving girl and boyscout companions the four advortures with their guide for kitheir places in the beat and started. Boile closely they puddled across the stream. They however had a narrow escape in crossing the str a stream Either they had been seen by a enemy escape in crossing the str a stream Either they had been seen by a enemy cann neer, or class it were stray or random shorts for three times by the narrowest margin highexplosives narrow margor lished their boat, and narrowest margin highexplosives navely marrowly dem lished their boat, and rave them much clouds of spray from the river water mingled with river moss, make and and and fishes together with clay and stones that they'll never forget in a live time, and their boat was so demolished by the additionable to the start they had to swim for it untill they reached shallow water on the other side, and then started across country travel the direction of general Sladerlinia's position. They no sconer had left and a "arned off the main road, and were about "wanty pards, away when it seemed and if the road they had just left, just did not else but movely go into a woolcanic evaption, "and they were literally flung back into the river by the year generation. They never the less heaving and a cover for several minutes the very concussion. They never heless keeping under cover for several minutes must be show, and followed it along for a time under cover of bushes for they helisved they were seen, for with their in hiding the shelling seemed they believed they were now off the main road, on which they felt sure the main minutes of the general Greatheart and Halsted They soon got out of the cange of fire, and passed farm house after farm house moballenged and any estioned, and another then'y minutes found them some few miles on the read tward the christian lines order general Sladerlinia Seeing a big squadron of Clandelinian cavarly Aires under general Exaderin in Beeing a sig squaren of Cannellin and cavary appreaching at full gallop, they went into a rood to nide hide under cover for bedden if any one should enter nocidentally and discover them they had no fear of empicion arising here, while they would be detained under suspicion chould they be spotted in the open. They were nor many the min rood again, but they dended to chance it as they heard the main roud again, but they dended to chance it as they heard the main roud was caused by the enemy batteries, but there was no help for it, and they therefore started. They feared to meet various carties of howevers, but no not soul we encountered feared to most various parties of horsemen, but non not soul was encountered through once in a while far, distant or man shells would burst with terrific vibrations. It was swident now the exclosions were really from random shells.

They sometimes too did meet some parties of christian coldiers, but from ther some times to did med some parties of chita'has coldiars, but from them to be had to lide for them would be respected as the group and de a ted and their mirrion would not be accomplished. One parties present another requested from the leader how things tent along some portions of the other families. The subject widerily was some one, for they declared the Clardelinians were as obstinate as dewile, and though it might be a victory in the end the battle would be a ratter of long endurance. Three miles of

In the end the battle would be a ratter of long enderars. Three miles of travel, and suddenly about row handred yards away a great wall of smole rose up in from of them followed by a cloud of debris from the earth. The defonation and concussion three them of f their feet, but they rose again.

"This is one part of the dangerous travel" declared Angeline Jennings."Heaven only knows whether big enemy mines are placed under us or rot. That was a mine explosion. Somewhere beyond the Clandelinians will show a toriffic fight soon. Over ronder is a Clandelinian position, near a Calvorinian summer home. Once past this we'll have to leave the road or we'll be under chell fire as if we were in a popcorn c sharer / Two miles aff is a canal, and we must rot go tward the christian lines in that location——nor that I fear discovery, far from that, but there is no possibility of entering the christian lines on this side as we'll be under fire from both. Our only chance is on the side I left the main road, the first is by recreasing the dangerous spot of the river. We must also travel round Vantura Junction, and it's dangerous in the face too."

"How far are we from general Slafe Sladerlinia's position nowill can hear a prolonged firing of volleys of cann on now very clearly, it sounds as if it was world gone crazy with thunderstorms and at least for the last two hours of their travel which would bring it tward noon, the insane booming of so many guns c ould be distinctly heard.

"It is about two miles in a straight line, but it will be double by the route we have to take...."

Turning to the right after crouching low for fear a concealed battery may open upon them with grape and canister for Glandelinians may fire on anyone here intheir own fear, the party went their way through a small wood. Then to their right, another Volcanic evuption of explosions becomed forth, and a great hurricane of splintered trees flew in all directions. There stood neat near by in the open on the road, a great building, and they saw at the same thi time this great structure disappear into a cloud, and when the cloud lifted there was not a trace of it standing, while how the four ever escaped with their lives with showers of stones and bric s and all other debris falling about them absolutely must have been miraculous though the explosion was a great

"Those are either mines of Gang-Gang-shells"the guide said. "It's either from random fire or we have been spotted and the enemy is trying to get us. Now , to avoid disaster, though we'd rather be slain by the explosions than be captured and share a worst fate we will go half a mile further and then halt to find out bearings; for we cannot go ahead too much in this direction. I'd chance climbing a tree to see whether we're fired on or not, but it would dolay our expedition."

"They sat down on a bank at a short distance from any road, and looked at the great comber signify from great fires which were regime because of the battle."

"What an extraordinary view. "Gertrude said." "Mat fantastic puffs of smoke clouds rolling up from great rows of cannons. What an immense variety of smoke clouds and overhanging wreaths from big conflagrations, and especially from 8t Ethelreda. What is that strange column of smoke nearest to us! she requested of the guide ...

"That is a conflagration in some distant big forest started by the enemy to cover his retreat when ousted from a position yesterday. All the christian tear troops are in position, and the enemy has today counter charged several times against the position and are fighting like demons to retake it. Beyond between us and that position is general claderlinks main line. That is the between us and that position is general suggestion in main line that is the explosion of a volley of high explosive shells, do you not see the huge wall of suddenly rising rolled up smoke. That's where his headquarters is that house far away with atowar and an Angelin and flag flying over it, standing alone in that is ing cround by the "iyer," "And that is general Sladerlinia's position "The girlscout leaders exclaimed Slancing at the small tower."
"That sure is his position "their guide and, "and do you not see the overhanging wall of white cloud which rines above it, and pours forth all along its front and from other sections listen I can hear the steady sound of countless thousands of rifles firing in volleys and framilades quite dis

"and with allithat firing going on, how in the world are we going to get there." "Gertrude demanded, impatient to be there and get ing in the message before it would be too late, and violet, and her sieters would come forth from immediate any and cun into the great por its that would comfort them."

"We will continue on here to the right, the viver is close by We will awim across, make a wide sweep round, and then come down to the river again opposite the christian position, swim across and then we are mafe ."

General claderlinia's position had for a long time during this four days of battle already romain tranquil after fierce battle and sussac e were raging along other portions of the christian lines. General gladerlinia well acquinted with by the reader, and a nun of great decision and firmness, and and affect much dreaded by the enemy, had when at times during the buttle along his front had exhibited signs of moving forest degainst him, tolegraphed to general Vivian full for full power to act and having obtained the required ferming ion he had awaited. required permiss ion he had awaited his was exhibited by the Clandelinian roops of the Seventh Omerian Irregular corple, the ar three in the mining coming of the fourth day of the enduring corflict endeavoued to move against the year of chador in lar army, and broke forward into some desultry action. Concred Claderlinia the same time surched the Thirt. Second corps of Abbicantians of the agence and put into action a battery of Eachine Eum artillery, with some Angelinian Corps to their lines, and in the small action that occured, surrounded and captured the whole of this Clandelinian column, and forced the surrender of the whole of er this action of decision and energy general fladerlinia had no further activity. The Glandelinians not t strongly entrenched against him were somewhat awad and subdued, and there fore remained tranquil, and tward see seven the enemy still remained quiet whereas at nearly every other section of the christian line the buttle was raging with a might iness which no one could describe. Yet Ceneral glader linin was not to be caught napping by this appearance of tranquility.

Every preparation before this had been made for the desperate struggle which all his staff officers including himself regarded to be coming. The positions were strong and connected with powerful earth and walled up trenches and a line of high breastworks beyond composed of sandbags and fasaines. Stores and all sorts of provisions had ben collected, and every preparation made for a desperate defense. The main cantonments were some distance from the position and were occupied by the Fourtheenth and Fifteenth, Fourty Eight, and Seventy First divisions of Mative Calverinian Infantry, and Seventh Calverinian cavarly divisions. Seneral Majesty's division the Twenty Second, a battery of calibre cannons were in position a little beyond so that in order to carry Blader linias army before it, the enemy would have to dislodge them from one arrongly manned position to another, and be dreadfully exposed, while the defenders were not. At noon the real storm broke out. The assault came upon the position held by the Seventy First Winkie corps, and spread at once to all the Mative Calverinian Brigades and regiments. The assault had first to all the Native Calverinian Brigades and regiments ine angular had lived started more like a spirmish line advance, gradul and sure, and then turned into a general caset of such man undered fury that nothing could pen it. The defenders to try and confuse the wild ascallants fired the bulgalogs blow up a magazine and let go with volleys of grape and canister for Jandelinians came upon the first line of paittons and Loped them in a wave, only to finally recall in what was even left of one third of a wave, and all the glandelinian officere of any commission were Filled. It was sheer madness to assail sladwilnias position, set the second glandslinian wave p shed forward milied and shelf-ared the savivors and opened a terrific fire. Happing milied and shelf-ared the savivors and opened a terrific fire. Happing for general Bruno Angels chwist in line all was in readiness, and though the assault of this second wave of Mangaboos almost carried all before it, the Division of Concentinian troops, with two hundred guns deployed into position on the cross road leading trand the position so as to bar the insane in onrush of the Glandelinians in that direction. The assault however was dreadful on rush of the organizations in that direction the absaut nowever was dreadful on mightide, it pushed back the christian troops along a line of battle five miles, though of course the Glandelinians fearfull exposed fell in immense droven and twenty generals were killed in their mid efforts to drive on their half crazed yelling demins. Nothing could therefore be done by Rumo Bright till general Bain Wight Linger could arive, and he sent an appeal to general Ben bogan for assistance. Ben bogan with a portion of general Hobert Bowens Winth Cor.s, and a battery of machine guns and heavy coneral Hobert Bowens Minth Cor.s, and a battery of machine gurs and heavy cannons came up into position. These were joined by seven hundred thousand men of the various Corps under Second, Termer Mid-Hollester Johnings, then up ame general Walter Johnings, and Walter John Hawloon with their Thirty Second, and Fourty Minth Divisons, and these moved forward to the counter charge. The counter charge was met with the most dorged counge and disperate fury by the enemy, with such fury as seemed that the Glandellnians could never be besten, under any conditions, but nevertheless the counter charge was irrestible, and the Clandellnians though first lang bravely were borne along to the very by the pressure results to stand before it, and the Clandellnians irrestible, and the Glandelinians though fighting bravely were borne along to the main by the pressure mable to stand before it, and the glandelinians lost the position they had sacrified such a terrible number of lives to capture. At the commencement of the fra general Walter Jennings was wounded. Tot even then the battle did not maps along the whole of Sladerlinia army, but the presence now of every waithels officer was needed as there was much excitement in the whole army body se of the sound of terrible conflict at the crossroads General Sladerlinia was away at the time, this discord started but he came in time to restore order and send goneral relatin sight Linear to the assistance of those who were in such dire need of he, help. Later a flerce angust on the rear was attempted, and so violent was the strungle that all the imitive christian officers were called into service, while general Matches mas cent formed to guard the year, and these fought most heroically through the whole action on the rear and the Glando linking under peneral Hedda was a repulsed and put put to flight with ton on in claim and wounded that how if had even the victors. Thus one is source of anxiety for several Brano Engle was removed and safe too from other a facks from the left, and recleving reinforcements were prepared to resist even a greater assault should it come. The assault did come and so deformined was the front shown by consend bathes line against the unruly mildly making assailants that the Glandelinians could not penetrate. They let know a terrible artillony fire upon the christian position at about three in the afternoon but in the af answering fire, the chief Glandelinian artillony commander was mortally wounded and his son filled. Then the storm of in all it a fory, by a general and over helming assault.

OThis fine a large cave of Zimmer arctims and the dorsed Omerians adec come al Eandon some even or elight hondred thousand attends their itperached to the road in front of the christian position, moved to the attack with independent lable fury order cover of the Chandelinian artillery of long range gauge-gauge-sholl gams which burranged the ciris christian position with devastating effect. General Sir St Henry with we divisions of the Thirty second Corps was mortally wounded, and his troops became panic stricks second Corps was mortally wounded, and his 'roops became pante strices attices and receiled in confusion. Soizing the advantage the Oliverhalms under general Estrabrook rushed forward in a strong reage to make a counter charge. The affair was disasterous in the extreme, in the hard to hand conflict that occured, the min Gan landelinian general fell dead from his horse, the artillery brought forward by the flares Galvarinians fore the monsterous Glandelinian column to pieces, the survivors bourfed and terror striggen, bolied, the christians pushed on tard the Glandelinian batteries, the gar are after discharging the monos more fled, and after only a loss of one hundred and sixty thousand in mon and officers, the christians were among the gins, in possession of the Claudelinian position. Two hundred cannons were captured many prisoners and great rounds of amountion and twenty but le flags, and among the prisoners was the famous claudelinian general Carl Staley. The rest of the Glandelinians almost caught in another position fought their way savagely to the rear and escaped to their stronger line of defense. The Gland Calverinians entered the position in triumph, and prepared defense. The Obard Calverinians entered the position in this imply, and predate to open whe limits, other trought, this was the greatest disaster to a strong contained thin a rank I mediately upon the recollment of the badly depleted and defeated troops leader lead, having no general or officer in command whitever because all officers were down if became avident that the depleted forces couldn't hold hold the stronger position to which they had retreated According it was evicated before the dranded Calverinians renowed the charge, its great magazine containing two handwed and fourly tone of explosives and six hundred thousand rounds of shell ammunition, a million rounds of ammunition for iffice and pistols, and eight handwed and fourly two barrals of powder was blown up, and the Glandelinian force received leaving admiration for the propagation of the most unusual and remarkable in the probabilities this was one of the most unusual and remarkable battless are written. The Christians under plain Hightlinger, began his own

The maide youlded, and they followed the G Argolinians from to the wason train staying a littl benind the others, and being the last to enter the ands whicheve the among stood loaded with shraphell shell and cartridges for according and rifles.

Fach took a long machine gun cartidge helt, and followed closel, apon the heels of the Party. In the confusion of the distant rolle of battle, no one seemed to have noticed the addition to their number, and they passed the sentire sentries on the road without question. Then they feel fell a little behind. Those carrying the shalls paused just before they reached the bridge for the Chandelinians being ours absolutely that assumition was nightly being carried over fixed an occasional valley of propents in that ared to direction. The larty of girls halted halted under chelter of a house untill a shot flow last, and then howried forward govers the exposed spot. as they did so, and placed the cartridge belts around their bodies for rafe weepin and turned off from the road mard climbed a garden wall a shraphell shell exploded everhead by the bridge and all the soldiers carrying the shells dropped dead or rounded to the last min and there were fourty of them.

In a minute the four rirls and the guide were 1 lose to the river. "Halt who goes there. ?"cried a voice. "Halt or I'll five."

They obeyed and started forward on all rouns.

"Corporal of the Guard No. Six"shouled the sentry, and he continue this with alarming frequency and with a very load voice, though at the top of this "Go milently"the sening and "There are some more sentiries here. If we were not seen we were at lens theard... I don't now whether they've fees or Angelinians."

Stouling quietly along, for they were all showless, there was the sound sound of rurning men and soon one man cried the evidently run the guard the had shouled so loudly;

"I saw them pass by here a moment ago. Four girls and a man with them."

"hat vere they sentry?"

"hat were they sentry?"

"I'm not sure. They take strangely decemed."

"Here they refugees!"

prison...'"
"My name is Angeline Ceclia Jennings" she answered.
"The Heaven be praised said the general. "I didn't recognize you your diguise is so complete. "There is your derrest sister Dolores and Jane Jennings."
"Why Dolores had been injured and has remained imactive untill she recovers. My other sister is among the Camp ire girls. We have a message for your private sear sir which we wish you to send forth to Hansons lines as you alone can do it, and if I might suggest it would be better to retain our guide close by for a few minutes lest his good news spreads too far You will sees the reason when we have told it to you."

General Saddrinia c cave the sign. and the other officers retired

General Sladerlinia c gave the sign, and the other officers retired with the guide.....
"Our message sir is, I regret to eay far less favorals favorable than that transmitted by the guide, and it was not only for that reason that Angeline Jennings desired us to accompany us here. If he or us had been captured by the Chandeliniane he would have told his mesuage that way purposely to decleve the onemy for the general had advised us not to have him me en secret of his instructions if he did fall with us ato the hands of the enemy as it was desirable that they should believe that he was about to advance and thus relieve desirable that they should believe that he was about to havance and thus reather presence upon you by retaining a large force on the road up to Vantura. But in fact sir general Vivian bids us tell you that he cannot do that if he needs must capture Bt Ethelreda, though he can send to Plain Hightlinger, "ero and Hemo to your help, He too must hold Vantura otherwise there'll be a nerious bend in his lines which will result in disaster, and the force available for an amunce upon St Ethelreda must be needed to be used to fight available for an awance upon St Ethelreda must be needed to be used to fight its war through Vantum and force a pith through the city. The instant he can place his army into possession he will advance in general and will in the meantime continus to me effects to as to sep a large force of the enemy engaged with general Halsted, He fears that it may be a day or so before he can advance to your aid with a chance of success. The min thing nocessary sit is that the battle is ano extended, is so wold and furious that it would be sucide for Violat, and her sisters to come here now, and I want you to any them not to love largons army for the present They had received to warm them not to loave lansons army for the present. They had proposed to start by to night."

"A few days or so the general said That is indeed a long, long, time for such a desperate enemy we have to face, and we had head hoped that a bready help was a riving in the main. Well we must done our best. I am not as yet yet as it is believed sorely present but may be at any time, but I have not the alightest doub's that we can hold out for a month if necessary. Ceneval Vivian cannot accomplish impossibilities and it is wonderful that he has been able to capture the town of Vantura in the face of much remistance."

"We thought it beed to give you this news nomewhat privately, general in order that you might should you believe it necessary, retain the news from your army to in care such a long time should elapse without aid. And

The mens faces testified the dislike they felt for this dancerous buriness The mens faces testified the distinct they felt for this dancerous before by they understood it was necessary, the enemy was abouting the cheft in position with a form beyond measure, and were becoming victorious and if something runn't done disaster rould follow. These men made their way and if it to the generals headquarters. The mirlnoout heroines at once under stood at once the repurpance with thick was felt to the approaching of this part of the battle field. The Mason children were almost ordered for cuffy cike to move out of the version as the buttle was becoming wild in the extreme and they might be shot. St. Ethelreda will always be celebrated for its suffering from a plague of onslaughts, and indeed his assault here was assuming supprising proportions. The numbers of badly reunded and supplied suldiers collected, the blood spilled in the bat lefield, the impossibility of preserving certain portions of the line without reinfocements against such a vave of etorming Clandelinians thich vivaled the accust's of the dage before were dreadful indeed. The christian two per water the delich tarfare status against the assailants, power was plentiful and gan cotton too, the shall fire who so terrific that it seemed conflers lerious of colders we ld have been blown into the air, but these wholesake executions, and this terrific tearing of the Claudelinian wave to pieces again and again however often repeated, appeared now to me eno impression whitever on the terming Glardelinian coldlers who were just as determined to vin an their enemies were to stop the assault met in a turnly of balone's or pistol and wifle Both sides constantly met in a turnly of balone's or pistol and wifle shats at close quarters. The hai of the day was terrific, while the fact and desperation of the assault invitated the chair in coldiers a known to madness. General after general of the for aide was about to death or wounded madness. General after general of the formula of the pascult of the pascult repulsed and brigade after brigade was wiped out, assault after assault repulsed and brigade after brigade was wiped out, assault after assault repulsed and atill it continued in the same inddening horror. There seemed indeed but the choice of two evils, to cover the christian defensive lines by artillery even at the chance of hitting friends, or to withdraw before the storm and beer up against the assault in other positions as best as they might. The fighting soldiers of both sides were bathed in perspluition. The former alternative was chosen, and the assault however creat, was repulsed, and the defensive men endured against it, but to expect such a host of enemies to design a such as a suc to desigt no soon was clearly an impossibility. Fvery charge of the enemy cost them as much loss as in every big and bloody buttle of the World war, and too the christian losses was terrible and the terrible action extended along a thirty mile front.

foof with replied Angeline Richee

The roof was the same as those of other houses in any city, flat and intended for the inmates to sit and enjoy the evening brezes of a unmer...... It was also sed for skating in the winter. There was a low parapet on the roof and this had been raised by a line of sand bags and behind them half a thousand soldiers were lying firing through the many openings between the bage, to try and shoot off as man of the enemy assaulting the distant christian position as they could and also in answer to the storm of rifles and machine runs the enemy also were maintaining upon the house. Stooping low to avoid the bullets, and holding large sheets of heavy tin over their heads to prevent themselves from being hit by fragments of shell should spin or he shrappell burst over their heads, the four girlscouts and ludcliffe, moved alou's across the terrace, and li lying down, poured out through the holes which had been left for the rifles. The generals headquarters stood on one of the highest points of the ground beyond the defenses of the main line which was in action and from it they could obtain a view of nearly the whole thundering teeming line of the enemys batteries which once in a while showed themselves when some of the walls of smoke lifted.... They were indeed higher than the positions held by most of this section of the enemys army, but one of the Clandolinian but evies consisting of guipe and canister gune, and a line of michine gune distint only some one hundred and fifty ands from the building dominated the whole position nearest the house and though it wasn't active now it showed to be a battery greatly dreaded should it start in action too.

"It was one of our batteries, and the enemy captured it two days ago. It was a most terrible blunder that we did not destroy it when it was evident it would be captured it will be if it is not now an awful thorn in our side, and general raderlinia's headquarters will then become untenable. There is and general claderlinia's headquarters will then become untenable. There is a dangerous d'andelinian chief, who surprising to us is a ne negro in the service of the Clandelinians, who has his post there, he is a magnificent shot and he has destroyed a great number of our gumners of our batterles and disabled many a cannon. It is almost contain feach to show a head within line of hi fire. He professes misself to be a Hegro Christian just fighting in the war for adventure, but anybody who is really a friend of our Blessed Lord wouldn't fight on their place unless he plant; get acquanited with the and wouldn't right on their dide altess to dian't get acquaired with the animal he's fight has for but's he is a damper to as for more than any one of the initial locality. The locality of the locality of the battery and set fire to the barracks in its locality, "aid indeliffe.

"The Clandelinians are so numerous that we could only hope to succeed with wholesale loss, and we are so depleted in this portion, and as no reinforcements arives for it we cannot therefore afford it. So the general ref mes to allow any of us to charge the battery but I fear we shall te driven to it sooner or later. That new battery is terribly troublesome also. There do you see it, it lies, a name a cannon just over that brow , so that the shots from our batteries cannot reach it, while it can pound away at our paition and the house with high explosives, and indeed cover all the assaults the enemy nurls against us.

"I sho ilu have thought "Serruie maid "That a good rush at night might carry it, and spite the guns .. "

"No we should sure be certain to start some sort of noise however quiet we are, and those machine gun batteries are all loaded at any time in action or not to the muzzle with explosive grape and canister, we have found that out, for once general hand Mic-Mally nurled a storm of assault against the battery, and they fired such a storm of grape that the assault was all swept way to the last wan, many thousands pon thousands of them, besides wach which there is a numbered thousand Unarian infantry men on duty at night, one alcops at day and is at pst at night, and although sometimes the battery ceases firing for some hours especially at night the rifles hever ceased their meeting fire. We can nold our positions against the fiercest on alaughts but as beneral Vivian is not able to lend as was nelp so far, we cannot are launch one ourselves. It would be sucide. If it was the enemy infantry alone to contend with , all right, out the batteries are annihilating."

The five child scouts lay wistfully vaccing the two batteries known and a of the firther one frequently struck the house, and two or

"There were six children stain by that last shot"an officer said coming up from below and joining them. "They had gone into the house from the camp which is being hit hard by shell fire, and one of the shells made its way through the earth, and tore its way through a blocked up window." "We must find some means o to have hose batteries silenced Gentruse, what ever comes of it indexifie said in her ear.

"I finally agree with you haddliffe, and Jennie too, but how is it to be done. We cannot do it ourselves alone there are too many guns. ?"

"Have you no idea hadcliffet." as Ked Angeline Idehee.

"Well my idea is this "unswered indelifie." I consider we could chose acha c chance under cover of a lot of smote, we could originate enough s, ange smulge fire to do that as the wind is off from as tward that battery." "But won't the enemy empect something. !"

"I believed the enemy might have the idea that his shots set something on fire. We could observe the bearings of the batteries most carefully, and when they stop firing, and we believe the day troops are being withdrawn for the late afternoon regiments, we can secure a strong trusty force, crawl out with them all under cover of the fog and make for the guns. When we get close enough we can surprise them so suidenly they won't be able to resist, but before that we all of us must remain on the ground so that no sentry can see us creeking the total one may be able to resist, but before that we all of us must remain one get creeking the constant of the constant forward under cover of the smoke, then during the confusion many of the men with a sponge full of water can give a squeeze on each of the touchholes so there would be no chance of going off till the charges were drawn, and thus give the surprise party chance to retreat saftly before the enemy come in too s rong numbers. Then we could recoil to our position with our commanders the game are disjoied, and one of them can muster a stronger force, carry the game with a rush, and spike them permanently."
"Gapita I hadeliffs, we are with you, even though it seems hopeless to try it."

"Now let us take the exact bearings of the Glandelinian batteries. There was a long lane you see running along from boyond that corner nearly to thr gass. hen we get out with the force we'll guide we must other for that because it is Comparatively clear from runtish and we ain't so likely to knock a stone over and create a row. We must choose sometime when they are pounding away somewhere else and then we shall not be heard even if we do cause a little noise. We will as Mrs Mason for some oponges if she has any, we need not tell her want we want them for." "And you believe that it is best to do it this afternoon early, Maclife dear." ?

General number commands the goard from twelve to four this afternoon, and as he is an easy easy going fellow he'll do anything I'll say, while some of the others would be scared of such an adventure and back out."

As soon as early afternoon was on, and the required immense smudge fire Was produced a little procession with six little forms on stretches covered with white cloth, and several of larger size started from general StaderLinias headquarters, and a number of somen and children followed. That sad morning had been a burden to many and now this early afternoon the dead children as now t be laid in the earth. Death of course had been busy ever where, nd in such a climate as that produced by the heats of the distant forest fires, and in so crowded a dwelling no delay could ta e place between douth and burial, and the victims were puried as fast as possible. There were no time

A little distance from general Sladerlinia's headquarters the procession j ined joined a larger one, one with many of the bloody days victims from othe other parts of the making battlelines at total of which this was only a small portion, at the head of the and procession wales the lev father James one of the arm y Catholic Army Chaplains, who was distinguished for the bravery and self devotion with which he as the very dangers of losing his life labored among the many wounded soldiers as far as he could rugh reach. The servicatione having first been I supe for the dead, on which they were now enauged was in itself exceedingly amgerous for thought to go through a territory exposed much to the enemy's deadly fire-and-- and they were throughoutly during this four days of latrile so fear been remar ably well informed it was was going on "itain the positions -- every names", or so they would open a general fire in the direction of any spot here where they found out a por in f the away would be emplayed in the ead invocation, in Quietly the end little procention moved along, though tallets whistled and abelia niged and exploded around them. There seems I current is signalling for all his batteries to try and silence them. Lisen to how all those cannons roll their thunder. It is a spanmodic cannonade, and the explosions of shells are sha ing the ground lile an earthquake/ come along."

For an hour thefire on both sides was incessant. The wo hundred and sixty nine guns of the two glandelinian batteries concentrated their fire upon the Slandelinian position, while at least six of the next guns opened upon general Vivi clast line's headquarters while from the trenches closest to it the fire of the enemy's musketry flashed and cracl oraclized incoseantly sending a terrific hail of shot to keep down the reply of the christians on the roof. On the christian side the garrison on the terrace disregarded the enemys heaviest rifls fire, but crowded behind the sandbags and maintained a most steady fire well concentrated at the flashes of the negreet cannon seen through the wall of clouds pouring forth, while from the christian batteries the gunners unable to touch the enemys battery, and being forced to keep down the infanty.

The Glandelinians most unusally carefully instructed in military service had concent constructed long sheilds of rope to each gun to protect the gunners h ot not manning shield guns, but those at the best could cover one or to two Glandelinian coldiers and the fire from the christian positions and from the terrace on top of reneral Sladerlinia's headquarters inflicted such heavy losses upon the gn gunners, that these batteries were were withdrawn and the shield guns put into position. The fire nevertheless didn't cease. It vas now One P.M.M. and Gertrade had collected at her bidding a large force of men who would dare the great adventure of silencing the gans having first filled their sponges with water and putting them into small pails to retain the water. There they joined eneral general Hansonia Johnston-"I can't see how you can thing of it Endcliffe"? he cald hut nevertheless those batteries are enough to drive one mid. We are a customed to them but they're so devastating among our refugees."

"I' is not exactly that sir. "Radclife said"But we must do it. I and Certrude have made up out minds to silence those butteries, and we need your assistance on that We have got many eponges full of water, and we mean to go out aslect a number of men to also use pieces of the wet spones and drown the priming. Then when we come on the return and tell general Nemo He will move forward with a strong force, rush to the assault and capture them. That will cause a gap in the enemy's lin s which will soon be disasterous for him.

"O I don't object but you and your followers here must either be possessed or mad to try to even imagine to try such a thing. "the general said in astonishment. "We might all of us be wiped out." "I'msure it is easy enough sir. "radcliffe replied" At any rate we mean to try it."

If can't thin of letting you precious girlscouts go on such a dangerous adventure "General Johnstonia sald." Thy you'll be in a buttle, facing terrific fire, and Heaven only knowns what will happen. Be wise and let only the leaders attempt it. They can do it as well."

"No sir, we cannot and will not change out minds. "said Gertrude. "If we do not go we'll not let any one else go. What we want you request of you is to tell your men not to fire if they see a large troup of men in gray moving tward the enemys lines in the next few minutes and after that to listen for a call like this "and she imitated the meow of a cat." If they hear that they are not to five at any one approaching from the outside trench. Good by sir. Wel We will assure you we'll return saftly..."

and without waiting for general Hunsonia to make up his mind whether or not his duty compelled him to detain them, to re prevent them from carrying out the mad scheme of which Egdcliffe had told heem of, the five children Elided off through the saudge cartain they had formed to where their surprise troop dressed in gray were awau awaiting them. They did not remove their shoes but wound round them numerous strips of cloth so that they would thread noiselessly, and yet if obliged to run for it would avoid the danger of cutting their feet and disabling themselves in their flight. Then being sure that general Hansonia would have given orders to his men not to five if they hard a notes close of herd and company solin towingfor his for lines, they and their many followers went noiselessly to the breastwork which ran from the christian battery past Beneral Sladerlinias headquarter s climbed over it in a wave, and dropped into the trenches beyond. Sanding Standing on the battery close beside them they saw against the gray norizon the figure of the cane all red in the figure of the return in less than have an hour if we are sub successful."

Then they and the whole force in gray pic ed their may carefully, and while midden by the fog produced by the manage over the rough ground till they reached the long lane, and then moved boldly but noise lessly for and for they were sure that for a little way there a was no danger of meeting the enemy, and that in the smu ge cloud they were perfectly invisible to any Glandelinian se ntry posted near the guns. After going forward a little over fifty yards, every one at the signal dropped on their hands and kness.
Although the gurs were still in action, they were raised in such a way that an approaching troop would not be hit, and hearing of the purpose of Gertrude the christian batteries had ceased firing in that direction though a dropping rifle fi fire from the left of the christian position had as usual still continued. This indicated to Certrude and her followers and the men t pretty accurately the peition position of the nearest battery. The whole force crawled forward foot by foot and soon reached the little ridge which sheltered the one hundred guns at this spot from the christian batteries beyond. The guns thomselves they could not see for behind them was a wall of beyond. The girs themselves they could not see for bening them was a wall of high in boush and except against the syr line nothing was visible. They themselves were as they discovered in a line between Slader linius Headquarters and any one who might be standing at the jams, and could see the reflection of hig fires showing that while the battle was maging fiercely elsewhere, and whole some of the enemy here was maintaining maintain maintain ing a severe dropping fire, where were populing or ange other assauces.

Having observed the ocene, the whole force Lead by the aring girlscouts moved forward cautiously inch by inch-Presently aductifie put his hand on something which for a moment made him start back, an instants thought, nowever reasured him, it was a soldier, but the hardness of the touch told that the the san was dead .. C rawling past it the child scouts found other bodies lying in teeming numbers, and then Gertruis touched a ah wheel. They had arived at the guns, and the bodies were those of agny men shot down a few hours before in the act of loading. Behind the guns a number of artillery men were stationed, but for some reason or other the guis stood alone and unguarded something unusual to find when the Glandelinians are so watchful ... A clasp of the hand and the five children parted one going as previously carranged each way, the soldiers with the sponges doing the same. Radcliffe rose very quietly by the side of the gun, Keeping his head however below its level and paising God that the smuedge fire sent the smo e even way over here che ran her hand along it untill it came to the breech. she found the touch lole covered with a wad of cloth to /dep the power dry from dew that may occure/ This indcliffe carefully removed, put up her hand again with the wet sponge cave a squeeze, and then cautiously replaced the covering. Gertrude did the same with the gun on the right of it, and even the four others, and all the men with sponges crept along from gun to gun, while the gray clad disguised infantry lay in readiness in case the enemy would discover this and give the alamalarm. coon of this battery the whole line of guns were disabled. Then they all crawled back and joined each other. / A clasp of the hands in congratulation, and then they were starting to return when they heard a dull tramp, and the head of a gray column came along just ahead of them. The child ecoute shrank back under the gime and lay flat among the bodies of the dead to world the scene which would ensue. The column of Glandelin lans ha lted at the guns and a stentorian voice as ed;

"Is the general of the battery here on duty?"
"Here I I am said a roice from behind the nearest gun and a Glandelinian officer came forward.

"We are going to direct an overchelming assault upon general Bladerlinias rear. We shall be strong for reinforcements came u up and we shall soon sweep the Christian dogs before us. It is the order of your general that you open with your game here to distract the attention of the christian butterles."

"Will it please you graciously sir, to prove to our chief geneval that a have fought the christian logs along this line all morning and that over three quarters of my carriers are dead. The fire of the christian dogs is too strong for as. Your Excellency will sees the ground is covered with our dead. See excelency how we have suffered Confound that smoke. We must have set so ething on fire within their lines as the emoke comes tward us."

The childocouts held their breath, when there was the sharp sound of many rifles, the man with the touch fell prostrated, while a teeming number of the others also fell, the general among them, and howrified cries avose from thesurvivors of the column. Then the men in gray who were lying down suddenly rose to their feet, and sprang forward attac ing the surprised enemy with frightful fury.

"Forward murch was the command of their officer s, and the whole column rushed foreard, the enemy being demorilized. However the Glandelinian infantry behind the K uns rushed forward to the counter charge, and closed with the victorious gray mass of men and a frightful unequal contest maged hand to hand. They were overwhelmed and forced to retreat their losses being awful. The dave devil child scouts lost no time during the confussion in creeping out again, and with the survivors of their gray coated troop p maing the beet of their way back, once fairly over the crost, with the realing one my in persuit, they rose to their feet delivered a withering fire which mowed the Clandelinians down in a line and ran down tward the christian position.

As they neared this hadeliffs whiseled thice and gave the "Out callmanum once. The cat calll was answered, and in a minute they were all suftly in their on lines once more, and all the persueing Glandelinians no matter how great their numbers who did not recreat quick enough were all I shot down.....

In a few minutes the order was recieved and the whole line reluctantly recoiled before the advaning rebels who however did not yell as they came on with bayonets fixed General Johnston waited untill the last of his men had passed, and those dangerously exposed to the enemys dangerous annihilating fire high was mowing all the mon down within his sight as fast as they were seen applied a lighted torch to the train which began to fix and sputter and seen applied a lighted torch to the train which began to fiz and eputter and then van off mounted his horse and followed the others, the last man to remain shutting the door of the "cant" as he went out, in order that the burning fixes should not be seen.. By this time may many tents and barrac sof the enemy camp were aflame and the whole force were rerr retreating at double time tward their own intrenchments followed by the enemy who still advanced silent; as they neared their own intrenchments the enemy came forwar forward and now let loose into the air a terrific rear of rifle fire, and the head of the ways of reinforcements were pouring out through the fields and head of the wave of reinforcements were pouring out through the fields and coming tward where the captured battery had ofcod, when the earth shoolas if there was an earthquaks, a mighty flash of fire lit the egy, a mighty eruption, there was a rear as of the loudest thunder concieved, and most of the retreating columns were swept from their feet by the concussion, while a shower of stones debris of the barn, sand and water and all sorts of timber fell in a wide circle and pelted even general Sladerlinias headquarters fell in a wide circle and polted even general Sladerlinias headquarters like a terrific chower from a volcanic eruption. Thetroope were goon up and scrambled over their posttions, and were all ready within fifteen minutes as extensive as their line of retrest was. For a minute the dreadful explosion that sounded like a hundred thousand cannon at one time was sounded or followed by a death like at hundred thousand cannon at one time of trough fragments, and stones, then from the whole of Sladerlinias line of trough embattled or not, a great chose of triumph rose up while a yell of fury embattled or not, a great chose of triumph rose up while a yell of fury answered them from the enemys intronchments, and from those who were counter charging and who had momentarily halted at the frightful disapter to so many of heir commades. Then those who survice answived came forward with redoubled fury and the attac raged with a frentied viclence.

While the struggle was going on incanely general Hansonias's first question was from general Name;

Finally it was discovered that Hanconia's loss th though considerable was far less than Hanconian himself. The latter suffered four hundred thousand in wounded, two hundred thousand were severely wounded, twenty two thousand were seriously hurt, but the gradual reports always came in showing that at big as the loss of wounded were none would prove fatal.

In fact the whole line of charge had gonevonly a few paces before the enemys lines suddenly opened with a terrific fire of rifles. The noise of so many columns of men stumbling over the debris of levened country houses, through thickets and over brush was heard in an istant instant and the enemy was aroused and threw themselves forward most gallently to defend the line.

"Forward"was the coo command. "pont answor hair fire, give them the

The divisions of 'roops under this scathing fire rushed along. They poured into and acroses the lane now, and were able to run fast, but the enemy's into and acroses the lane now, and were able to run fast, but the enemy's fire swept them off in appalling numbers just the same. The first fire had been followed by a crash of guns from the second and more distant guns but they were too close now to be hit by these and the shells and balls whistled overhead or crashed everywhere else in frightful explosions, but the only loss incurred was from the enemy's infantry. The foremost of the troops heard the voice of the nearest officer at the guns that had been rendered useless shout to his men.;; "

"Steady infantry and grenaiders don't fire till they are on the crest. Then open and sweep them away. Draw of the useless guns so they'll not capture

The first wave topped the crest and rushed at the guns.

"Fire" shouted the officer and the command came simultaneously all along the line and a crash of rifles stunned the troops. The first half of the christian wave was swept away into dead and wounded but in a moment the survivors rushedon to the guns, and though the foremost went down into bleeding and wounded in whole ling teeming line the others aided by the others coming up coming up behind swarmed mong the surprised and actorished Glandelinians and a terrific bayonet fight occured. The Glandelinians though fighting desperately and being Zimmarmannians were driven to the rear trable to withstand the assault, and the guns were in the possession of the victors. Then each man selected went quickly from gun to gun removed the quest substance, cleaned it out while the infantry pressed on, and in short order the whole battery was useful again, and opened upon the enemy with grape and canister. The Clandelinians reinforced rallied and strove most desperately to recover the gups under cover of the battery further away but in wain.
Another section of the christian assault struck against that battery and as the guns couldn't be depressed to hit them it: the battery was carried at one swoop. All along the line a short but furious hand to hand fight raged. at one swoop. All along the line a short but furflows mand to man light lagds.
The Glandellian infantry foucht most desperately but manyallinely, One of their generals fell and this caused disheartening and confusion. The firght their generals fell and this caused disheartening and confusion the firght was stern and bloody there was no yelling on either side, and the enemy was steadily pressed to the reart. A Fegiment of Omarians were surrounded and they knew it was useless to ask for quarter the lighening of bytonet significant against bayonets the sound of many shots close at hand and the sound of the fall of heavy bodies alone told of the desperate struggle.

It ended temperarily just as general Johnston came up.

"Search around before the main force of the foe comes to counter attack us "was his order They must have a munition dump around here perhaps a large one. We can explode that to cover our retreat for we won't be able to

Three hearty cheers were readily given then the general hurried off to superten shauler intend the preparations for the defense of his rear threatened by the "storm" from the other section of the Glandelinian army if indeed the assault would not be personed owing to the fact that the enemy did not seem to show any discouragemen which the blow just inflicted would naturally spread. "What was that terrible explosion what in the world has happened?" was as ed by a score of little femile voices as they entered.

"Good news" one of the soldiers said I believe was can deep in peace to night. The gune of the two batteries which has unneyed us all in this territory are all captured, and their huge magazines blown up, and all this without much loss to our side, thanks to the four or five girlscouts and their bey with them who went out with a mass of men in gray and temporarily dis abled all the gung of the first firstery first battery by wetting the primings as fact as possible. All your gratitude can be due to them. The endmy are storming our position new but I have doubte if they'll have any success."

There was a general cry of grateful joy, for since seven or sight guns of the battery had begun to play upon the house no one had folt that his or her life or the lives of those dearest to thom were cafe for a min on her dared even so much as feel to go to bed, they had been terrified by the dar ness caused by the burning of Ethelread, and now they created reund the child scout leaders, shalling them by the hand, patting them on the shoulders many or yory ing for very loy and reliefs.

The dostruction of the munition shed bothed them from least and the camps of the enemy would have it seemed deterred them from least and the camps of the enemy would have it seemed deterred them from least and the camps of the enemy would have it seemed deterred establishing a battory in the same place, as there would be no shelter for the enemy infantry supporting the guns, and after a result of the counter christian assaults it was evident to them that a large force must be retained in readiness to repell any 'u further assault of general Skiderlin as

But the assault upon the rear came, with tromondous fury at first the christian line there was chain and broken in several places and finally driven back but the christian generals had henty of artillery and troops on hand, and the flam attack was well nigh annihilated before the survivors of the enemy was repulsed.

Though the battle was raging elsowhere with a fury and violence which the writer cannot oven describe for a few hours nevertheless life was more tolerable in the region of general Shderlinia's headquarter, for although through the action in the neighborhood shot and shell f still frequently hit the house, and batteries multiplied in the neighborhood and the thunder of cannons became redoubled, and the fires in St Ethelvida became worse with the recent described final efforts to stop its progress going on, non of the artillery retained so deady a fire as that from the two batteries which had been captured. During the time when the assault of the enemy was somewhat slack but when buring the time when the assault of the enemy was somewhat slack but when the firing on both sides was more severe than ordinary and the noise sounded as if the end of the world was coming, one of the orderlies came up from the front to report to general sladerlinia.

For fear that the discovery of where the enemy were going to lay the mine would not be successful as it had falled to be elsewhere, everybody were commanded to clear out of the building, and all troops to move from the danger zone, for even if it was discovered the toilers intended to blow the mine to frustrate the enemy. Tward evening with the fury of the battle aligntly stopping it was decided that the enemy miners were probably worling, from a rulned country house, near their former two batteries which they had lost, and a gallery was begun from the bottom of the shaft. This may have been pushed a gallery was begin from the bottom of the shaft. This may have been pushed on night and day for three days, the christian workers now being cortain from the rapidly increasing sound of the Glandelinian tollers that this was the line by which the enemy was approaching.

To dig deep enough to frustrate them seemed impossible on time, for it was believed the gallery must have been driven nearly fifty yards in one day that many barrels of puers of or explosives were going to be stored there, and an effort was made to beat the enemy to it, by having thousands of men ta e up the wor at many relief shifts so as to be no stopping, and through the intercession of the Blessed Mother no doubt, a work which too the enemy on the other side three day and nights to accomplish was being done in less than five hours by the christians workers. Then the christians waited for the approach of the Glandelinian's Gallery. The Glandelinians meantime had erected batteries whose cross fire this evening swept the ground outside the pritions positions so that a sorties it was believed could not be carried out with any hope of auccess, but christian batteries replied from an unseen position and blew these clandelinian batteries into the air in a very short time and committed incapable destruction among the enemy positions driving the enemy even out from his camps which also reached was reached by the terrific curtain of high explosive shell fire...

It was therefore possible for any christian for force to be able to attempt any sort of counter or general assault had they wiehed to do so, and a long party was prepared to move out to drive off any strong guard force that might have been placed and to enter the enemy's galley and catch them at theor their work. A sentry too was continually placed in the gallery and each minute the sound of the pick and crowbar became louder and louder.

At exactly five o-clock that afternoon the engineers judged that there could not be more or less than a few yards of carth and gravel letween them. The train was laid low, and a cautious watchcontinued for some time until just at the moment when it was believed that an opening would be made the train was fired. The hearth heaved as if there was a tremendous earthqua e, and a great eruption occured sending clouds of debris nearly two thousand feetbhigh, and for over a mile showers of stones fell on the surrounding districts. The enemys gallery was blown in, and the men working destroyed and a loud cheer came from the christian twoops at the defeat of another attempt upon them.

another attempt upon them. The early evening began very badly for the whole of general Sladerlinia's army. The enemy hurled a dreadful attach upon all parts at one time at about five thirty, and concentrated his artillery in a dreadful storm of thunder ing fire that shook the air like a convulsion. The roops troops continued to hold their position but their locates was something beyond believing. General Bandico Ving, one of the Civil Commin doners maned by Emperor Vivian to such a position was chot drea dead while trying to restore his bro en front and ten of his staff were Milled. General Henry Lawrence Stanck one of the Relatives of Marie Stanck was shot from his horse and died a few minutes afterwards. The Reverend Father James was mortally wounded in a deed or errand of mercy, as were lieutenant generals Lewis murners, Henry Sherpard and Archer Rickson. Mover before in his career as a general did general Sladerlinia suffer from such assaults. They came at him i lije insane storms from an insane world / The Eighteenth Division of Concentinians observed a column of Hobbonites believed to be under general Heidl Horner was to be moving forward in a unusual singularly formed column miles long, and these yelling so fiercely as if the air was rent by the scream of a tomado these yelling so fiercely as if the air was rent by the scream of a command a most furious as a assault upon the Eighteenth Division. The etorm was inconcievably violent and wild, and the Glandelinians tore through and began to carry the position. Every soldier even the ill and wounded too posts wherever they could fire on the foe and hept up a n uncessing wither ing fire, annihilating a portion of the line of assault. The Glandelinians spurred on by their officers and the waving of their National flags pressed spurred on by their officers and the waving of their National rage pressed on through the hurricane of fire. The dim was productous—the "Devil yells of the enemy, the tremendous artillery fire on both sides seeming to tear the landscape away with their tornado of bursting shells, the incessant roar of exploing gang gang shells, and the terrible noise of rifl es along the whole christian line. The enemy summed and with their dare devil courage but they couldn't press on any further. General Mason threw in his own divisions and his fire of rifles and cannon tore the eveny away from his front. Blood literally flew into the air from mangled bodies during explosions it literally seemed to rain blood, ent intestines, fragments of bodies, bones dirt rocks and debris of serry description.

The Clandelinians along Masons line was swept away before the christian fire. Along general Herdrules from large waves of Clandelinians advanced in one most discribid description. in one most d terrible desperate and determined assault after the other. Each time however the withering fire of so many christian troops along a five mile front opened upon them, and also cannons from the line of pettien positions from the branches of trees, from the roof of general Sladerlinias head quarters, and the storm of grape from the nearest short range batteries caused them such frightful loades in wholesale numbers, that they wavered and fell to the rear Each fresh effort was led by brave officers who led on the assillants shrieting; "beath to the Christian dogs. On my the position."

But they died, even though their spirits animated their followers. Only once or twice did the assallants get near the christian line of intrenchments, and then but to fall back rapidly after suffering heavy loss, only to recleve reinforcements and go at it again with redoubled fury. So fierce was the "Storm" from the enemy that every half hour the position of joneral Sladorlinlas army grew more unendumble. The positions were being torn up, the building was crumbling away under the heavy and continued she ll fire, and as one negition after another heavy and outlined she refurees were heavy in the position of the refusees and the refusees position after another became absolutely untenable, the refuges were becoming more and more crowded in the small number of houses which still a offered some sort of shelter. Even dea h everywhere fearful as its ravages were did not become sufficient to counteract the clas claseness of the Racling, Crowded in gloomy rooms living on the most meager food -- for all the conforts such in gloomy rooms living on the most meager food -- for all the comforts such as tea, sugar, whise, spirits, ets etc were exhausted, and even the bread was made of flour, ground each for him or herself between rough stomes—without proper medichnes, attendance, or even bodding; tormented by a plague of flies, made ill by disgusting smells; condemed to inaction and confinement, the women and children had died off ragidly and the men refugeed although better off with red regard to light and air, sie/ened fast. The glare, fierce glare from the burning sity of St Ethelreda on this chore ble night of October the Fifth added to the scene, the flashes of explosions, the glare of so many rocket bombs in the air, the lightning like flashes of shirls of an and all other horrors of the battle was unnoving to say the least.

Half the christian officers of the whole of sladerlinds arms were laid up with ser severe, mortaly or any sort of woulds law climble, and all were lowered in health and strength. It was one day of the wildest and fiercest battle battle ever raged between general V ivians whole arms and that of the enemy, though it was "Tamerlino's first battle in his career, At near akt thirty that frightful evening, as Gertrude and her followers had just returned from a sort of short distanced accuting, a terrific and great explosion was heard, a sort of short distanced scouting, a terrific and great explosion was heard, the loudest ever heard before, the sty wan full of flanking fire and one of those posted on the coof, and down shouting;

"To arms. The Glande linians have fired a nuce mine under Howson Lotts Farm."

"The Glands linions are coming. They have broken the line." The reserves were cont forth, avery an not engaged in the battle yet rushed to the spot. The mine had curried away a portion of the thristian position, and the enemy with yells of triumph rushed forward driving whole brigades of demoliched christian troops before them. The confusion was awful. The christian troops in the reserve spring formed to the rescue, and then ensued a furious males. Each man fought for himself, hand to hand in the long gap, Hobbonite and Angelinian struggled flercely in deally combat, the chart report of the revolver, the thad of countings clubbed gups, the ring of be onet beyonet upon bayonet, the clash of sword against steel, the wcheer countings and the support of the countings of the countings of the countings of the clash of sword against steel, the wcheer of the chris inn trope and the yoll of the kindolinkane mingled in wild confusion. The enomy fought with a bravery that none could compare, and they presend on successfully, the christians were being forced bac, and the Olandelinians presend on with trimmph. It seemed their blood was up, and they cancelinians pressed on with triumphilt scened their crood was up, and they fiercely followed their advantage. Fart of the Glandelinian engineers ever on the alert admid the dreadful carnage joined the through with some barrels of T.N.T and the desperate Mationals were pushed back, sufficiently far to enable some of the houthouses of the generale Headquisters from hich which the enemy had been greatly analysed by the christian sharpshooters to be blown up. This success cheered the Slandelinians and spured them on to greater efforts, and the enemy too were driving two new mines.

The gardson of general Sladerlinia's hendquarters had now legs cover than before, for the building had been reduced to a mere shell by the enemys fire and all the women and children had a few hourn before been removed to other quarters and just in time before this "Frightful storm" came on. The division of general Herdrudes right was shattered by the enemy's assault. It was difficult to form an idea of the storm of shot shell and high explosives which except the space included within the very locality of general gladerlin as headquarters, but some notion may be obtained from the fact that an officer had the curiousity to count the number of shells that hit the building a glancing blow, or exploded in the yards in the first three hours of that territle evening and found found that they mounted to the almost incredible number of five hundred and eighty. Going through a hell as this, all that terrible 1 ve long day, with the enemy coming against Sladerlinias army in vave after wave in end less uccession, Gertrude angeline e rejoiced when she and her followers recieved orders from angeline Jennings to move further to the rear, with the news that the Glandelinians along their point of observation was advancing successfully. The Glandelinians here were Zimmermannians and led by general Warrener Vorger. About 100,000 of general Craniters christian troops had formed up in St Andrews Orchard firing on tye the enemy who were now dashing over the position in a surge of men three doep and rushed in a charge for general Sladerlinia's house. The first line fell into a confused mass of dead and wounded, and the second was shattered, but the third though galled came on opening fire as they ran. The scene of massacre was frightful, but the enemy came on furiously. General Sladerlinia's headquarters had through the whole day the post from which the christians had most arroyed the enemy, one of the men of the National Gurd in particular having also a great many of the Clandelinian officers and artifery men of the nearest batteries. It was tward this point that the enemy mines had been driven in vain, and it was determined by the enemy to destroy or capture this position at all lazards. The sudden rush of the survivors of that surge took the christians by surprise.

Scarce a chot was fired untill they had traversed half the distance, and then a fierce storm of mustotry opened from all the line of pointions hold by his troops. Still despite the big numbers of their t men going down the enemy i nue troops.btill despite the cig numbers of their clear going down the enemy pushed on at full speed without payeling to return a single shot. With a cheer they burnt in an awful swarm over the first line of the position, and while half the column of plandelinians entered it and engaged in a furious hand to hand combat with the Nationals along a sixmile front the others in accordance with orders, pressed forward to the right against the positions there, so as to prevent other divisions of christian troops from advancing there, so as to prevent other divisions of christian troops from advancing to the assistance of the others thus being so hard pressed.

The "Bervener" Clandelinians belonged to the divisions of troops who advanced and were soon also engaged in a hand to hand fight with the christians. Scattering through the Orchard under a scatting first they drove the Nationals there before them. Thousands of the Warreners were fighten flighting the fiercest, and a dozen of them burst into the hadquarters occupied by the firlscout leaders, before the latter could find time to escape.

A Clandelinian colonel by the name of Johnson entered first, followed by the grant Nad and richard helps the last of the party of the dozen Warreners. his sons Ned, and pichard being the last of the party of the dozen Warroners. Gerirude was nearest the assailants and she raised up a chair and gave the colonel a heaty blow. The Clardelinian colonel lay on the floor his excuse a heaven in with a blow from the heavy part of the chair. The Clandelinian lichard was in time to see the terrible chair descend again upon Neds head. Ned guarded it with his rifle but the guard was beaten down and Nod stretched Evanded it with his viile cut the guard was beginn down and not externed senseless on the ground, indeliffs brought down two others with shots from his pistel but the Glandelinian Richard raised his rifls to strike and hid him senseless on the floor. Pefore the Glandelinian could raise his rifls to aim it at Jennie Tuyner, the drove her little eabre through his chemtand the Clandelinian fell prostrate his body rolling down some steps it into the yard. All but one clandelinian romained, not after all being any match for the Einsecut leaders, and as the last fell this survivor any match for the girlscout leaders, and as the last fell this survivor tried to escape. Fortunately Angelire piches had her pictol still leaded and she fired, and the moddler rolled down the entunes stops after the other. The battle was aging fiercely outside but no more glandelinians came in, or thought it time to do so. Throwing acide her small rifle Contrude twend to raire Padeliffe, indeliffe lay as if dond. Schell hit the top of the house tore it away, and brought down a min of debric upon them. nother entered the doorway and explicaded in the room doing them no harm however but causing the floor to be torn up and the plactering on the ceiling and walls to come down on and all about them. Gartude leaped to her feet, and glanced out and saw that the christian troops (for the time being) in full retreat. The shouled but her voice was lost in the sputtering of rifle fire, and the rattleing thunder of exploding shalls, and the sharper noise, of chappell. Whi lo the others were accidend to stand guard at the windows and fire on any more who tried to get in, Gertrade run to Rudcliffe and of chraphell. While the others were accioused to stand gund at the windows and five on any more who tried to get in, Certride ran to Indeliffe and tried to lift him, and had got her on his ler shoulders when there was a tremundous explosion that rade such a concussion as to raze all the windows in the house, and to bring her down with indeliffe on top of her. Ceneral Greathers beadquarters had been blown up.

Greathers beadquarters had been blown up.

Following close upon the sound came the yells of the enemy who were following close upon the sound came the yells of the second line of defenses. Escape was now hopeless. Gurtrude lowered to the second line of defenses. Escape was now hopeless. Gurtrude lowered tiths adeliffe to the ground hattly dragging the bodies of the Clandelinians outside the door and then lifting indeliffe bore hi her down the steps into the cellar into which two of the enemy had fallen, followed by her companions. She carried Radeliffe well into the cellar, removed the wooden steps and then with great difficulty, also dragged the bodies of the Colonal and the obtains further in, so that any one pla noing lown into the hole from the outside "build wherefore not be able to see anything trusual.

Beyond rubbing leadclifts hands, while angeline Riches put cold stones to hi his forehead, Gertrude and whe could do nothing but Radclifts breathed, and certrude felt strong he hopesthatbher sister in disguise was only stunned. In a few minutes, she showed signs of reviving and in a quarter of an hour was able to hear from Gerrunds and the rest an account of what had happened, and where they ere

"It's a grand idea"said angeline Jennings when she told her what she intended doing. "Magnificent. It's nasty, horribly 'nasty, but after so many conthe of what we have gone through during this war one can see and do things

"Do you agree" ! Persisted Gertrule ..

So saying Gertrude took out her pocket knife,, opened it, and went to the body of one of the Clandelinians. This soldier had long matted hair.Gertrude body of one of the Glandelinians. This soldier had long matted hair terrices took the long matted hair into her hand with an exclamanation of great disgust but nevertheless saw at once that her idea was a feacible one. The hair was matted together in an strange inextricable mass and could be trusted to hang together. She accordingly set to wor to cut it off as close to the head as it was possible but although her blade was was a sharp one it was a long and unpleadant tas and nothing but the case of the necessity of the case alone could have merved her to go through with it. It was finished at last and she examined the hair with complacency.

"That's a magnificent wig "said Angeline pichee.

"Yes, I defy the best bar ber in the world to form such a natural one." "Arclimed Angeline Jennings.

"Now for that small tiger rug. "said Gertrude.

This was a long task, in the finding as they chanced the danger of being discovered by the foe but at last it was found, and Gertrude with the help of her combanions set to clean as well as well as they could the inside, of the hide... Then she dragged into a corner and covered up the carcacese of the deed men having first o'ripped the clothes off them and secured their pictols and anaminition belts, scattered a little straw over the bearckin and then her tay being finished, she and her followers crept behind the low logs again, any down and waited hoping it would be still outside... It was some hours yet and it was starting to get dark when faddlife awoke, and and sat up by her sides. Outside the din of the titanic stile battle, the steady noise of countless rifles here and there in sputtering roars of fire, and the roar of so many hundreds of cannons, and the bursting of shells was going on as usual with out interruption. now near, now close, and then recording but never ceasing.

"How do you feel now fadcliffe?"Gertrude asked....

The girls f were for a time in a pickle. For they didn't know what A troops these may be, of their side or of the enemy's. Fortura cly the night was very dark, and they were able to plans by many of these unseen. Their uniforms however didne't seem as dark as christian uniforms wore, and their fore they were extra cautious and over and over again they were challenged and answored the words they understood must be recleved by Glandelinians or sentinels, and therefore they were not melasted or questioned....

"Indeliffe guessed from the fact of their having been met with a close to the position, that they might have been wall known by the glandelinians bind they been Manlays, men instead of Tamevlines, and this therefore proved the case of why they had been no easily able to pass through the landelinian troops without hinderance... troops without hinderunce... Eeven 1 of the men addressed the [1ris, and one of them pointed to the "bear", but Curtrude waved her arm to seed her head as Fily, and strode on, and as "vagabonds frequently are abdorbed in thought of where they re going to get their next meal, and unwilling to converse for nothing, the questioners impudently fell back, but swore at them as they did so, telling them they were better off to be in the army as accurs or did so, telling them they were better off to be in the army as scouts or omeiting of the sort o instead of being lay good for nothing trumps. Ferond this the territory resmed described. The most population divinced ricturius landulinian divisions lay far away and for of the Clandelinians so diers or officers, save those on duty at night, and as pickets and sentries had to be cut after nightfalls.

The instant they rege in a quiet to best and the rese to his feet. They goodness madefulfer ones book Certride. They now turned chirply to the left, presently crossed a wide field leading from the road and continued on through quiet lanes ...till they came to the stream was the guide which they wanted, which they hoped would lead them tward general Vivians part of the lines, and they followed it along, going the same route which general Mio-Cantier afterwards followed in his advance, untill they came to a small bridge acrosses the canal. Once over they were they felt sure within chrivtian territory and fairly safe. They therefore went on at a most rapid speed untill well in the country and trat down by the roadside for a consultation, as to their best course of proceeding proceeding. All of them were of the same opinion that the perils which would lie in their way of reaching general ivines army closest to St Ethelreda would be very great, especially if the battle still vaged, and to travel by day because of the battle would be sucide. Too this road was occupied by great numbers of troops, of which side they couldn't tell unless they were seen, and they may be landelliners who were determined to bar the way to seen, and they may be landelinians who were determined to bar the way to general livians against general James Cannon and Mic-Cantler. They no doubt had set advances without question because it was natural that clandelinian troops should be coing their way from St Ethereda to Vantura but it would not be at all natural that ragged girls should at this time be going in the opt osite direction, and Tamer lines clandelinians could be very suspicious too.

Moreover and this reighed very strongly, with them, especially Certrude ——they were well aware that general Mic-Cantler will or was already advancing with a force fully worthy of the deed tefore him, general Tamerline had heard that Mic-Vantler was or had mustered the biggest christian army on had heard that Mic-vantier was or had mustered the biggest christian army or all record so far, and they thought should he even succeed in the sting thand St Ethelreda, or form deplyo deploying movements Taner line would be trapped, and would not be able to retreat wis whal hampored as he would be with so many millions of his wounded. In that case Tamer line would have to continue to hold. Bt Ethelreda untilla fresh relieving force arived or continue to nome of monateum unitil a light method arived or retreat and give it up altogether and lose his career as a fighting man, Animated by these cosiderations and fea feeling sure that Tamerline will coon rue the day he dared to go the "rounds" with goneral vivian, Gertrude and her firends friends determined to puch on for St Ethelreda sections where they hoped they may arive on time to see the end of the battle, at o whose com monogement they had been presen .t present...

So suspicions would be so easily excited however they believed by their Passage through that line of country which would be they felt sure be found denuded of enemy troops except of cour e enemy scout patri patrols, for all the Chandelinian regiments and divisons of troops were in the action now or had marched off either tward St Ethelreda or to the left of the line of battle and the country was in the hands of the christians would would not only not mister e a wandering warfarer as a foe but give him shelter and food 2.2.2

It certainly was unusual for "wagabonds "to be accompanied by a "Little boar" butbit did not seem mean impossible. Handeliniand might not be suspicious but the christian troops might bo. of Course Gertrais prospected protected that it was absolus absolutely possible that they should continue on during the whole night, for that as long as they may still be in one territory of the enemy they would be at once detected in the day.

"I vote that we continue all to night girls, we'll sure be able to reach our friends by then. If we cannot so it we can turn in and hise during the day. Then in the evening shen it gets quite dar! We can reach probably the cuter limit of the christian line. Then one of us can begin to shout, and bring soldiers to our gidlf we are tooclose to the foe lines we will go on one within the christian lines we can readily change to our uniforms. . I told we could only have something extra for you had, as it is awful for you to have to go far in the bear outfilt, and no about I've not the ulightest noubt that your feet is very uncomfortable."

This plan was agreed upon, and they moved across the country for the Vantura Road, natcliffe elipping out of his bear disguise, and simply wearing it wrapped loss lossely round him. All girl and boy scouts had been very accustomed to such incessant adventures that these would have no officulty in continuing on all night. As they saw a Rarty of schliers coming on horses and carrying torches they retired into a Broup of trees, and threw themselves down, leadliffs using cautious enough to get into the bear custom themselves down, haddliffe to the cautious enough to get into the bear custom and butt on it up in case of surprise.... It was of course over heat but at least the files coulan't other him, and as it was quite lease for him it was not quite so war mas it would have seen had it fitted more tightly. It was past ten that night before they continues o on, and they too having had not, ing to worth antle in food auring the terriols day sefers they were extremely hungry, fet now so many so disters were about that they didn't dare expose themselves, and no count if they were beingtrailed the snemy would be forming a ring round the country about Some no doubt when searching at hight would bear torches and use bloodhouses for so far there were no appealed the ight for the present. enemies ins ight for the present.

And believe me I'm awfully sloopy."

Indeed they had made a very long march that night so far and soon it began to become day and fortunately there was considerably more light this morning with a strong southwe southwesterly what, out no sun appeared, the sky being sty gray, Certruis collocted some dry pieces of wood and lith a fire. Then she and angeline pichee made a hole in the ground, and filled it with glowing embers, and when the embers were just out she cleared them and the removed the wig which was teeming with lice, rolled it up carefully, and put it into the hot even she had thou prepared and covered the top in with a sod. Then carefully glancing around to be sure that no enembes were in sint, sight, she and the others removed their clothing old rags nothing sleep and emenoyed a dip in the stream near a bend close to the woods. They noticed for this time of the year that the water was as warm as it would be found in a beathub hotsenowth to be un constrable for the first ermerson and they wondered time of the year that the water was as warm as it would be found in a bathtub hotenowh to be an comfortable for the first ermere on and the y wondered why. After their swim they again smeared themselves over with must, and sat down in the hot wind to dry. Then they returned to the oid filthly rage again which they had to redon with a feeling of disgust. Then bertrude opened her oven, removed the wig, gave it a good shale, combed it as hard as possible without injuring it, and put it on once more saidting;

"Trank God and Hie Blessed Mother I feel clean again."

In this whole nights journey, these girlscoute had traveled only about ten miles, and were now closeto St Ethelreda. As they started on again they say a squadron of Scoodler cavarlyapproaching. They were seen therefore there was no need to run for it, to do so would have incurred their fire, and there were too many to cope with in their suall number. The Scoodlers moved close up, and contemplated the wild looking boy with his long tangled hair and his eyes peering out through the angle tangle. One of them gave a passing glance at the "little Bear" and then gaid;
"That is no real bear it is a little irl in a bears spin. Are you going to a shows!"

going to a show. "" good near it is a fittle gara in a nears spin. Are you going to a show. "" getrude had feared that the discovery might be made and at first didn't find a word to say in a newer but one of them muid; "Fool sure they're show childreen. "Bo you believe they're Christian dogs."

"They sure must be. "said the leader.
"Do you call me a dog damn you"said ladcliffe angrilly and rushed forward as if to strie with a long staff he carried, and as the man still insulted him he twirled his staff round his head brought it down with such a force on a iddiers wrist that it nearly disc a islanded in a range drew his pistol. Clandelintans began to shout, as the criticer in a range drew his pistol. Before he could fire however his courages threw themselves upon him crying "Don't shoot a vagabond. 187s mighty angerous for their councies might be near here and mesuare us all vagabonds are worse than christian dogs. leave them alone and let's go on."

The fur lous Scoodlier while cursing and swearing was draged away by his compades, and the girlscoute calmly resumed their way, and now congratulated themselves upon having done more of the trip than they had holed for for now the first hour of traveling in the morning brought them, nowever much I new the first hour of traveling in the morning prought them, notever much inger than they had expected for Angeline idohee cut her foot badly again against a piece of glass lying in the road, and was ee lause that they d have never reached the christian lines in a month had they not been already up to it.

They now saw in the s hor: distance the flag of general Vivians h, headquarter building il, flying from the watch tower They had made a long detour and came in at the wain rear of general Vivians position. On this side the country was perfectly ofen, not as enemy in right but the region as they can was teeming with christian a patrols livey new nothing of general vivians part of the battle of Yesterday, but that early afternoon the enemy had sent a force of six hundred thoreand men to intercept a heavy train of troops coming and which had need on its way to einforce general vivian, it being a portion of blain right Lingers Corps, brigaider general Bel benligan one of the most gallent and promi promising officers of the christian army had been sent out with a force of equal size of which only one fourth were the brave (alverinians, he not them on Heidi's goad and routed the enemy with a loss of four hundred thousand, capturing all their gums, one hundred and thirteen of the five hundred guns being centemeter shelld cannons. A most curious instance here occured in the namer in which the Glande Linians will fight with a bravery and furly which is inconcievable when driven to Lay or cornered. The army of six hundred thousand men nowever also had made such a desperate it fight that they had even caused the also had made such a desperate if fight that they had even caused the christian loss to be about fifty thousand in dead and one hardrest thousand in wounded in the frightful contest. After the dreadful fray was believed to have been ever it was found that a party of some twenty thousand of the Scood liter remais had toen in jointion in a number number of farm houses once belonging to a f farmer whose name was George Allenberger, a Foriegner by birth but a loyal mun to Abbisannia's cause, and who was now in the army, while his wife was a few Gross Burse, and his three children scouts in the army of general Concentinian Aronburge. General Currens infantry about the house and street we resent to drive the enem, out but about the hundred should strong we re sent to drive the enem, out but its commanding officer and fifty thousand of its men were claim by the desperate handful of Glandelinian soldiers, many of whom were found to have rapid fire machine gums.

The Six ty First was watsons division was then ordered up two hundred thousand atrong, supported by long runge centenater was, but their assault was repulsed with a loss of one hundred and fifty thousand slain, sixteen generals dead and many wounded. While the batte raged fiercely elsewhere, it was not untill nightfall after many repeated fierce attempts before the enemy in the houses were finally overpowered nerce attempts there exists the snewn in the nowes were that if overpowers and a number of other generals congerously woundedand many nor had fallen. Altogether the victory over this little band cost the christians the logs of six handred thousand in dead and wounded, far grater logs than which had been incurred in defeating six handred thousand planed in the open. The result of this fearful and bloody engagement has that the road in the rear of the christian position was perfectly open, and Gertrude and her friends experienced no hinderance whatever in approaching the christian lines this morning...

J sunie rad after crossing the road in the early morning left the bear c ustom behind her, and adopted the simple clothing ofa vagabond. Indeed their hearts leaped within on beholding as they they continued on a larg large force of Concentinian cavarly trotting along the road two miles from the camp. "It is the Gemini"Gertrude eaid, recognizing the leader Gingigore with him, and a boyecout who appeared to be adeledefob. "I believe I recognize the leading officer girls. Petain your disguises a minute longer, we shall have some fun."

Gertrude accordingly stood in the middle of the road and shouted her strange girlecout cry "Who-o-o-oha "at the top of her voice...
"Get out of the kay you little numbekull"Gingigore himself said, as he drew up his horse on seeing the wild figure covered withshagey hair to almost the feet, twirling her formidable staff-de-baff2.2.22

Gertrude stopp ed a moment.

"what do you raggamuff ins want?"demanded Adele-Pe-Fob himself."Have you been Glandelinian spies escaped from the christian lines. It so---"lie · finished by drawing his sabre;

"Not a bit of it more than you are yourself"Oertrude answered x draw ing her own. "I'm as good at the sabre as you are my lad."

Adele-de-fob reined his horse in showing his actorishment in his face.

"No had drawn his sabre unconsciously, never really intending to use it on her, and seeing her doing the same and meaning as it apprently seemed to really use it if she was attached, and defiance from such a figure as this,

"Who in the world are you!"!"!!!!" demanded.
"angelinia Gertrude Aronburg, this is Radoliffe, Jennie gurmer, Jane Melfort, and angeline Jennings." and Gertrude pulled off her wig.
"By heavens a in Heavens" a said all of the officers, and Adeledefob leaped from his horse exclaimig;
"I am glad to see you where are on earth have you come from and rigged up that way .. Some scout who came up here from V and and had met some scout patrol who had come down from gladerlinia's army and he reported thatbyou and your followers had gone on into his lines in disguise, and that news had come that you got saftly in...."

"go we did" Jertrude said. "And as you see we have got saftly out again. We

"and what was the state of things in general Sladerlinia's army thenffff"
General Gingigore as ed. "How long could be hold out. We feel sure it'll be another i six hours before general Vivian can hope to send him heavy reinforcements

"Another six hours "Gertrude said "That is terrible Gingigore. General Sladerlinia was or is hard pressed when we left."

"Well"Mused Gingigore" laderlinia sure is a good fighter. Haver before had the enemy ever whipped h.m in all their assaults."
"That is not the half or it"said Hadeliffe himself.

"hat's wrong?" demanded the general subjucted suspiciously.

"hat's wrong?" demanded the general subjucted suspiciously.

"My"Said Jennie Turmer the enemy were driving e terrific mines in all directions which explode like volcances in eruption, his losses are weakening his army every hour, and the men fit for cuty have to be worked to death to try and frustrate the enemys mining details."

"You don't are "each general elementing statistics" by Heave a if "You don't say, "said general Sladerlinia startled." By Heave s if Sladerlinia has to give way general Vivian'll be beate n. That'll leave a huge gap in our battle front. Couldn't they hold out for a litle over Bix hours.'

"No sir. It don't seem possible that they could hold out for another four or five hours from the time the battle will renew to day; but if it can be done they will do it, but it'll be short of miraculous."

"Do you happen to hear of my unils!"demanded Gertrude.
"Sure. why!"

"We could telegraph him to come with his army ac and help general Vivian."

"The man that brought the news about you said he was all right and hearty, had an ernormous army, and his cavarly was doing good work scouring the country around Maximillian. He's too far off to do anything right right away. Now will you ride with us and report the news to general Jacob Marcus. He may form a plan to help us out for general gladerlinia. I believe its the best plans .. "

So saying he ordered threese of the propers to ride to camp with the news, while five of the soldiers dismounted to give their horses to the girls while they would walk alongoides.

So trude had thrown down the wig when she removed it from her head of the proper mounting Radcliffe recovered it rolled it upon into a o little bundle and said: bundle and said;

There was unusual excitement oreated within the christian lines within eas reach by the arival of G ingigor as Gemini Cavarly with five what they if first thought were ragamuffine arrested with arms in their possesion, and the news that they were obtricting rilscout leaders in disguise lne intensifed the excisme excitement and yet the news did not take long to spread. 2.2 The cavarly two hundred strong draw up at their own lines, and then dismounting general diagigore at once sent an orderly to general M arcus with the news, ..., while the five girlscouts were showed into a tent, and enjoyed the luming of a bath, and a message was sent round to all the various enjoyed the luxury of a bath, and a message was sent round to all the various officers of the general, which the quarter master brought sufficient clothes to allow the girlscout leaders to put in their appearance in the garb of little girls, there being no uniform s here for them..... A good hearty morning meal was ready for them by the time they were cleaned up and dressed, and these were enjoyed after a fornight's feeding upon unboiled grain varied only accous occassional piece of dried up half mouldy bread.... The break fast, concluded they accompanied General dingigore to the general'S

Indeed they were most cordially recieved by general lineus harous, and omitting all details because it would be too long a story now to tell, they gave him an account of their having been cut off during a successful assault of the enemy, and having made their way to this portion of general vivians army in disguise. They they proceeded to describe fully the state of affairs with general gladerlinia's army, a recital which was at once intereshing and important and yet alarming inamuch as several scouts messengers had got through from general Saderlinia's to general Vivian, as none of them carried lotters—— for these would have insured their death if searched——they had brought simply messages from general Nemo requesting for speedy help to general gaderlinia, and their stories as to the extent of the situation at Sladerlinia's were necessarily vagur and not trustworthy...2.2.2.2

The most satisfactory portion of t Gertruies statement was though greatly alarming, that although general gladerlinia was getting short of ammunition, and that all the comforts and many of what are regarded as a almost the necessaries of life, were exhausted, his loss was frightful in men and officers, the enomy wouldn't let up on him, and it was hard to say whether he could maintain his position for six hours longer or not."

"But why!"as ed the general. "Sladerlinia is a terror for the enemy, a great fighter, and no Glandellinian general has even been a le to stand up to him before even in an unfair fight."

"The reason is this "said Gertrude. The great fear is that some or manyees many essential portions of h the defensive pointions may be

"B at hagn't he been able to resist infantry arrays.?" "Against open assaults he is safe"said thickel Jonnie Turmer" and if 'int was all he would reed no help from any one and could hold his own. General Oz is the min comandor of the fee concentrating against him and is doing what is an unheard of thing before."

"what is that?" "The enemy is now devoting the molves so much to driving tourible mines that however great the care and vigilance of the troops and guards, and others, they are not always able to detect them, or even if they do so to run counter mines owing to the exposure of so many of the t troops, and one mine has blown to their deaths two whole Commanies."

Goneral Marcus pendered a moment rubbing his b eard thoughtfully, and then said;

then said;

"Where is general Sladerlinia situated.?"

"Bear Vantura Junction."

The general consulted a map, help held a private intercourse with his general s for a few minutes, and then coming back to them said;

"Buch obliged for you your description wirls, it throws for me a great light upon the state of affairs, and is very valuable. I will atmost elegraph a code report of it to general vivian, and general Plain wight Linger. The dangerous situation that will turn up if gladerlinia is forced to give way, and the proschip need of aid, will no doubt impress general Plain Mightlinger with the urgent necessity to place general Ben Marcus my brother in a position to mive against the enemy and enable general. Hemo to advance at the earliest possible moment. He of course will also if you wished it communicate to general Concentinian Peter aronburg the news of your safe arrival here, and request him to advance to our aid if possible. Will also cent a note of warning to general Vivians brother of the danger here. You girlscout heriones and your boy companion here (indicating had lifte) have gone through a great deal since boy companion here (indicating indeliffe) have gone through a great deal since you were in this battle, while we have always been successfully holding our own, and my other brother lake Marcus destroyed the enemy storming him yesterday, Horever the fide has turned now to curselves have recleved lauge reinforcements, and a strong munition strain from general Cannon, and I m reinforcements, and a strong munition strain from general Cannon, and I'm intending to smash through my enemy's front to day in accordance with general Vivians plans. I can stars my two brothers, and will send them immediately with all their available force to help gladerlinia at the start, and if possible will come myself. In the meantime you will at any rate for a few hours if not days need rest. I will leave you for at least a day with your will at any companions of the Cemini, and you can send for your survivors of your obild scout regiment unless you with to go to them. I hope that you will with your companions here dine with me sometime to day."

A little later Certrude and her followers met out in the Company Street general Donald Aurand whose xhivalrous bravery placed him on a par with mperor vivian, who was gelled the "Thunder old 2" of the christ-lin armiestie was short of staff officers, and did not wish to depitts the fighting powers of his corps by drawing officers from them, and the girlscoutthough superior to any one in their own mank at the say of the Princesses, nevertheless volunteered to attack themselves to his perconal staff that day till, the proper oney could grive who should be be in the place of day till the proper ones could grive who should be be in the place of those fallen. However for a time there was no occassion for their styles and they put themselves at liberty to do as they could otherwise untill that days battle op evations began in earnest. The next few hours were accordingly spent in conversation.

There were a large number of boyeccuts in camp here "Called the "Lore Formes ens belonging to no commander in person and being of an Independent Regiment, and every boyscout in that egiment was anxious to hear the tale of the outcome of that portion of the battle at laderlinia's, and of the personal experiences of the girls cout leaders in entering and leaving the endangered christian division. They therefore had to get one after th other on a tall stump with the two hunded boys around them and told all they found wise to relate in detail. They were the heroines of the day, and all these elder boyscouts were much pleased at the simplicity at which which Gortrude and her companions told their adventures and at the entire absence of any consciousness that they had done anything more than any one else. In fact they rather regarded the whole husiness as two or five school girls much regard some adventure in which they has b ind boer engaged, Certrude in farfi particular, regarding all their adventures, with the exception of all the horrors and thrills of the frintful battle in the light of an "immense lark,"

In the meantime during the right general Marcus's troops had been torling half the right in the positions and the batteries under the direct direction of the engineer officers, and av as daylight had started to come on with more brightness this morning than had beer for months, every heart beat high with satisfaction, that aftet standing for four days on the defending defensive while other portions of the christian line had made grand and fur four gesquits, and regelling continual assaults of ernormously superior numbers, at last their turn had grived, and that now the day was at hard then the long defered rengeance was to fall upon the blood stained Clandel in lar a we we the battle could have its find lending or not for this day was to be the bloodiest of the terrible conflict.

General Vivian decided to storm the city of Vantum which the enemy during one of his fierce counter charges had recpatured during the night more terrific artillery fire than ever before in the battle and sent the first battering shot against the city which had for three or four days resusts resisted the most fierce attempts to capture it, and which when captured had again been regained by the enemy. Hitherto indeed, heavy shot shell and shraphell had been fired at the various Glandelinian gunners in the position to try to silence their terrific answering fire, and the city and Clandelinian resitions beyond had been shelled by the motar batteries sho and claimed in an positions beyond had been shelled by the motar actuaries sho so that the annon cannonade was a fierce and as steady as well as destructive as the artillery storm in the full duration of the "World war "combined, but either purposely or otherwise not a single shot had been fired with the object of injuring the Clandelinian position or bring the awful resist ance of the enemy toan end.

For four days the christian armies had both been on the defensive and offensive, and the enemy not only held the positions, the two closely divided cities but had during each succeeding night ereserted very strong new positions and had free ingress and egress from both the towns at all points mave from the sides a facing the christian positions, and never before had a battle b een more stubbornly and desperately fought. during these four awful days with the configuration at St Ethelreda aging raging so terribly, however the respective positions of the two buildeg term clous enemies had changed a good deal because of incapable destruction committed during the artillery storm, and the frightful onslaughts, and by quadruple numbers of dreadful fires. For the first part of the battle the Clandelinian armies had cut up the christian army a good deal, and had thrown o general Vivian out of position so that he had to resume a new one, and the Clandelinians were elated with their most tremendous success they so far had ever gained in battle in the war, and even on so hard a general to beat as general vivian. Never before in any war all over the war zone could any other Glandelinian army claim such a success. It was the best won battle so wa far on all record, general gladerlinia too was despit his career now losing it it seemed by his threatened smashing defeat and destruction, general V ivians right wing was no more, a new one being formed under cover, and though he outnumbeed the enemy three to one he had lost all positions he had carried, and his loss in dead and wounded exceeded that of the enemy at Evangeline St Claire and Cedernine together, while though dreadful the enemy loss was yet far inferior.

They had been intoxi cated with their success, and murder of women and children, and the destruction of Certrudes bands, and despite the fact that general Vivians ernormous numbers concentrated against them, their more successful a tillery fire disabling so many christian guns and demolishing the positions made them not only confident of success but arrogant in the belief that general Tamerline had general vivian down on his knees. But their main success had been on these three days in general. Yet general Tamorline was worried. Despite the failure of all his attempts, even with ernormously su erior numbers to drive the enemy forces from the grip which it had so insanely and tenach tenaciously held the main danger was, general Manson had vanquished general Manley at Lebanon, general vivian was not even dreaming of giving up the contest " but of renewing it more vehemently., Hansonwas advancing, Concentinian Aronburgs dangerous Abbiennnian army was only five miles away, and coming as fast as men cald march, and general vivian had too many men which never saw a battle yet while Tamerline had no one to replace his losses. All this began to dampen the aromardor of their enthusiasm. Doubts as to whether after all their great fighting at St Ethelreda would meet with any further success, and fear that destruction of their Omarian armies would result for their atrocities w would finally come upon them, began the first time to enter their minds, and with the fact that their spies brought proofs that general Vivian planned imediately to form a try a final effort to crush Tamerline was n enough to cause the greatest apprehension. For a time what had alarmed the christian armies throughout the was zone,,, was that a frightful complication of pestilences swept or was sweeping throughout the country especially among the refugees, a reign of terror prevailed throughoutnthe country and in many towns even though ill the inhabitants were robbed and mrdored murdered, all sorts of property were raided or fired, and violence reigned supreme and the clandelinians did not seem to far fear the pest ilences.

Many of the clandelinian generals were terrified at the terrible resul results of the long enduredbattle, and had tried to get general Tamerline to desist in his "storm"un upon general Vivian-but finding their a withority was purely nominial began to long for an ending of the horrible st stuggle struggle The heavy shell which from time to time crashed into reneral Tamerline headquarters disturbed his peace but he was stubborn and would not give up the battle. The it was then by an army which however large and smallll was confident of vixtory, against one which however however large or equal in size, was beginning to doubt that firal success would the be theirs, that the main operations of the battle began on the morning of the sixth of the month of October. The artillery at some sections of the battle line had continued active night and day. Every might hadseen heavy be batteries of fresh cannons (maybe they were freshies) rising at a distance of ody three hundred yards from the Glandelinian position, fifteen thousand horses pulling wagons brought oith, two hundred thousand mon filled sand bags, placed facines and erected traverses for the gume. To the surprised eyes of the Glandelinians the batteries had rose as if they had been erected in the Magicland of Oz. The Olandelinian generals had vived viewed there repeatations with a strange apathy. They had tried at the commencement of the formation of the batteries to sweep the ground with such a storm of grape shell and rifle fire, and to throw so many hand bombs that the erection of batteries so close to their positions vald have been impossible, had not the other long gange christian batteries had down such a storm of curtain fire of shells and high explosives that the enemy couldn't do a thing, and when at last they were able to bring non their heavier hatteries and began a furious cannons de against the christian lines, the positions had reached a heitht heightting afforded shelter for all those employed upon them......

Pach battery no fast as the heavy gues were placed into position opened a steady fire upon the Clandelinian positions untill hearly a half two thousand hig gues thundered incessantly, and yet represents with greater violence on the morning of the fifth day of the battle.2.2.2.2 On this day the enemy now fought desperately. They harled a line of assault two million strong against general Vivians center, and in the horrible "storm" that resulted that whole line was shattered and rolled back to its own position in panic and confusion and with many of its generals dead. The christian artillery fire in the meantine (vor powered that of the gues at the long bastions of the foe positions near Vantura opposed to them the intrendments were torn into the air by the explosions with great loss of life,, but from the Clandelinian gues placed out in the open on the christian left flank they placed uponths Rational batteries, while from the enemy positions elsewhere a horrible storm of rifle and cannon fire was poured upon the christian troops. But the christian guenere continued to hammer away unceasingly. After half an hour a simul aimilar "storm's before poured against the christian line, but far more extended, sweeping against general vivians center and right wing, but the christian artillery and musfetry fire tore that the or helder of their own positions, leaving a wave of dead and Meantwhile section by section the messive Clandolinian positions before Vantura crumbled under the christian fire or erupted into debris. Orders were issued at once for the assault to be mide, which came at ten oclock, sometime later after the enemys seconfd second storm wave had been devast ated. The assaulting christian force was divided into four immense waves of their own, the first composed to one million three hundred thousand men of the Se venthy Seventhy Fifth Domdolian Corps, one million two hundred and fifty thousand men of the First Bengall State Fusiliers, and one million four hundred and fifty thousand men of the Calverinian division——in all of a probability of four million men under general George Cashemrea were s to storm the enemys min line on the left Wing. And all this was the first column, or wave....2.2.2.

The secon. second wave of christian troops consisting of two hundred and fifty generals and other officers, and flye hundred thousand Concentinians, and six hundred thousand angelinians, added by three hundred thousand Domiobians, of the minimum and the second Bengall State Fusiliers, and three hundred and fifty thousand men of the Second Bengall State Fusiliers, and three hundred and fifty thousand men of the Fourth Triponligonlian Ina Infantry under general Daniel Jones, were to storm the Glandelinian position fronting Vanturium Rum. The third wave consisting of two hundred thousand men of the Fifty Second Corps, two hundred and fifty thousand men of the Winkie Abyssinkilan battalion, and five hundred thousand men of the Abbleannian Infantry of the First Grand Division under general Bengimin Marcus were to assault the Glandelinian centre, and the first line position which was to be torn up by the curtain high explosive shell fire of general buckwig Baldwins batteries. The pourth Mave, eight hundred and sixty thousand thousand strong was made up of many brigades of Angellnian Regiments the Red Gross Battalions of Concentinians, and the Main winkie Abyssin ilian divisions the latter being six hundred and fifty six housand strong. It was commanded by general Richard kindernine, and was to try and carry the town itself held so desperately by the Glandelinians called the Mannaboes-Scoodilers, and also the Omerians, and to enter the city by two sides if possible. In the addition to these immense four waves of christian troops was the reserve one million five hundred thousand atrong under general Doubleday Federal. They were all I the powerful Abjeninkillan bodies, but there were also the Sixty First Corps of Angelinians, the Winnen Battalion,, the 344th Hinfantry of Angelinians under general Pennser, the Winkie Abyasinkillan Auxillary force and of the Sixty Hinth Grenadier corps who were to cover withthe aid of the artillery first the assault of the "Christian storm Wayes", and then to go forward with the reserves reserves. This though it must be understood, was not the main of general V ivians battle line, but the assaulting columns only to "storm Wayes" and the process of the second storm of the main of general V ivians battle line, but the assaulting columns only to "storm Wayes" and was the second storm of the main of general V ivians battle line, but the assaulting columns only to "storm wayes" and the second storm of the main of general V ivians battle line, but the assaulting columns only to "storm was not the second storm of the second st

This latter body however, was to await the success of the "storm Wave" and then to follow them into the town, and assist them as required. The cavarly and the rest of the force, including all the advancing light field pieces was to cover the rear, and defend the christian position, should, the desperate enemy attempt a counter "SETCHA." Precisely at ten thirty in the morning, the Sixty Winth Grendier Covres dashed forward in Skirmishing order tward the Alandelinian positions, and the heads of the main assaulting columns, moved out of their positions under cover of such a tremendous pieced by flashes as if a long fu fissure sruption from the ground. Gestrude Angeline, and her followers, who had stuffed cotton in their ears to shut out the dreadful sounds of those "crazily thundering" cannons we had placed themselves on duty torick grainil Jacob Marcus, and as accust comed as they were to danger, their hearts beat first as they watched this movement of so vast a wave of christian troops. Indeed it was to be a tremen dous interprize—an interprize absolutely unrivaled in any history ever written—for so many hundreds of thousands of men to move forward in one wave to assault a position and a city garrisoned by some thirty million well trained troops all it may be said, fighting with ropes around their needs. The total of the assaulting christian line was equal to that of the

As the long angular shaped s irmish line of the Sixthy Sixtieth Grenadiers dashed forward in front, and the head of the main column advanced, a most terrific fire of firearms of every description added by machine, rapid fire, and other small cannons brose out from all sections of the positions, added by the thunder of hundreds of bigger cannon; which the christians all necessity for concealment being over, answered with a tramendous cher as they swept forward.

For a short time as outers as the fire was, and severe knowth to have tired of the full force of the Oremadiers, it was however either too high or too long in range for not a soldier fell. The first section of the wave arived at the first abandoned trench of the enemy, and there so fast did regiment after regiment of men fall into dead and wounded that there was a temporary halt. It was some time before they could be rallied under such a severe test, and officers and men fell as fast as snow under the hall of bullets and from the graps and confister and shells of the enemy. Then as they gathered in strength in the position there was one wild cheer that was as deafening as the noise of all the wild acund of firing, and they dashed up the long low slope of rubbieh and stones and other earth debria and passed the over the position drive ing the Glandelinians before them. After four hours desperate fighting, in which the christians were repulsed four times with sickening losses the entrance to Vantura was won. Scrambling breathlessly up, always close behind their gallent general, despite the danger of it all, though it was apparent dare devil recklessness on their part when they did not need to do so, Centrude angeline and her followers were among the first to win their way into the city, and fought as the

An equal ly rapid success had attended the assaults upon the left wing of the Chandelinian position by the Second Wave. Nor were the Thrid Third far behind in the violent furious ascault through the apple and Cherry tree Orchards. In this big Orchard, or surrounding this big orchard was a high stone wall in the center of which was a gae gate, and here a bloody deed had first need to be done which always lived in the memory of christian generals and the nation in general as long as it would exist in the world or stories as a nation. As the head of the accoulting wave moved forward in the face of a dreadful fire of guns and weapons of all descriptions which galled them terribly, a good sized party started at the doublt tward the gate. The party was commanded by Lientenant Homer and Francis Connings of the Abbiennian Poyal Engineers, and Captians amoth and Jamesonia, and six corporals of the same Corps, the begler of the Fifty Second Brigade, and one hundred and ninty four Angelinian sappers and miners under Turner Jensin, and George Jennings .. Each of the sappers carried heavy high explosives in bags, and covered by such fire as the christian the center of the wall, and from the parapets a storm of rifle five was continually pured upon them. When they reached a ditich ditch they found the draw bridge destroyed, but crossed in single file upon the beams on which it rested. The gate of course was closed, but a small postern

added a heavy fire to that which streamed from above. The sapp ers laid their bags against the gate, and slipped down into the ditch to allow the firing party to do their work. Many had already fallen. Sorgeant George St Peter was shot dead as he laid down his munition bag,, and three corporals were wounded. As Lieutenant Warner tried to fire the fuse he fell shot through both legs and one arm, while two others who stood by were shot dead, and Pameay Comorton was severely wounded. As he foll too Lieutenant Turnor handed the slow punk fire head to Captian sanders who lit the fuse, but fell mortally wounded as he did so These then those who survived timped or were helped into the big ditch and in another moment a terrific ear splittingexplosion convulsed the ground and air with the din, and the gate was blown to bis, bits and the wor wall therevtom into a huge breach mangling to death some one thousand one hundred and fourty of the enemy who were behind the gate and that portion of the wall. Then general Threanter seeing that the way was clear ordered Colonel Hardar to sound the advance and the assaulting column came rushing forward with a 6hard annihilated the defenders of the wall with their sharp rifle fire, while one portion of the column brust through the breach into the Orchard, closed with the glandelinian columns there, cut them to pieces, and routed them tward the city. In this gallent action general bargenter fell mortally wounded, General Daniel Hinders was also shot to death, and five others wounded, O of all the column of men who who too part in the glorious deed of

O of all the column of men we who too part in the gloricus deed of blowing up the pate only two lived to wear the Abbiennian victorious cross the reward of valor. Six of the lieutenants had died on the spot, two lother lieutenants died of their wounds, two captians were mortally wounded, and the colonel too was shot to death. Thus only Seg Serg ant Leange, and Private Improved lived to wear the honor so nobly won.

The battle raged with the most stubborn fury in the rear of the Orchards and in and across the Farm belonging to Allenberger, and was as bloody and as stubborn in this space only, only as a hundred Antstams could have been in that space of time. Here at the farm a check was made. t the Clandelinians fought to frightfully desperately, that the christians couldn't advance any further, their losses was awful, and they had to throw themselves into positions to be free from exposure, and to be in reading in case the but degree Glandelinians would raily and counter charge, and the scene here was like a hellish inferno. The barks of all the orchard trees was torn away by the rifle shots, and the branches too, rail fences on the farm were splittaned by the same fire, or hickory broomed, and at allenberger's Crossroads the loss of life was immeasureable on both Bides. After the battle when the fr ightened Farmer and his family dared to return he stated that he believed a bu million bullet holes were in the west side of his farm house, end a thousand in each window pane. The battle rassed onward and forward across the farms both sides equally as buildoggish and tenacious, but endurance was a matter of course, and unfortugately it was the christians who began to yelld ground inch by inch, and general Callahan who direced the battle here had to send for aid for his losses was so severe he believed he couldn'thold out much lon longer.

These Chindelinians were under general Tamerlino in portion.
Go of Genoral Bornard Dirnor who was in general command of the whole assault ing force by the aid of his generals concentrated the two columns which had poured through a portion of the stubbornly defended city, and then swept the enemy off the the positions and ramparts as far as Center Street, the whole of the northern portion of the town being in the powass possession of the christian troops. Then he proceeded to push on tward the main section of the city, where he expected to meet general Watson with the fourth column. This rave however had failed to even reach the position of the enemys right wing, the enemys defense proving so strong, the enemy being as despetate as men fighting for their very lives, and the position was held by so numerous a force of Turmerannians that the christians found it impossible to carry that position, and after suffering heavily beyond magaure, the commander had to call back his men his retreat being covered by the cavarly, and the artillery.

The Clandelinians counter charged him most furiously with the aid of artille artillery and machine gums but they in turn were repulsed with greater loss than they inflicted upon the christian troops before. Then general or as general Berlardson or Bernardson too advanced through the narrow lane sutering the St Gertrudes General City Park, the christian christian way e of troops was swept fr by a storm of fire from window, loophols, however, from behind every tree and bench and ther postions in the rarge a fire to which no effective reply whatever was possible. The ark of a fire to which no effective reply whatever was possible. The thistian troops were shot down in terrible numbers, and at the left of the park by the big Animal howse a whole platoon or drove of the troops was annihilated, by the fire of all the soldiers in that building.

Ceneralsefter generals tried to tralighte torn up christian columns

Generalisation generals tried to rally the torn up christian columns and foll one after the oas the other, regiment after regment was destroyed, and brigades were reduced to regiments as fast as they rushed to the assault to try and carry the part. It was a terrible horror within that once beautiful city, but navartheless the christians were were or seemed to be more determined than the enemy and 1 no losses seemed to discourage them and they even ris rished on again and again. The main commander general Bernard Dinner jist as he was in the act of cheering on his men, was shot through the lung, and abdomen and fell back in the arms of two men behind him mortally wounded. He was carried off by his sorrowing soldiers, and lingared untill the twentyfourth of this month of October , when to the deep grief of the whole of constal uivians christian army, he after recieving the Last Peccaments explicat.

Finally the general who had to supercode him saw that it was evident that any attempt no matter how desparate to force a just further in this direction would lend to the maceure of the whole wave of christian troop and would be useless in the brushin, and that this park must be won step by step, and mostly by the aid of artillary, the treets by firm orders, not caused natural by by the aid of artillary, the treets by firm orders, not caused natural by by the enemy were ordered to retreat to the positiond they had captured and from there they stend such a fearful withering fire that the Glandelrians no matter how great were their numbers were absolutely afraid to counter charge, and part closely under cover to escape annihilation themselves.

In a nimilar respectione had befull the third wave, which had guided or help by general Callahan, who was well accominted with the city as it ind been his own home two, endeavored to form a circuit so as to readh and carry the houses centrains the city, awaver so desparate and furious was the resistance experienced that this wave of troops also had been compelled to retreat to the positions it had captured. The reserved column had followed the hird third in at the northwest section of the city, and had after some buildings and an open square in that neighborshood, ,, most important which was a large and magnificent public two Library and when therefore the Third column fell back, all these horse were had against four desparate counter charges of the enemy and gins were constituted planted to command the streets leading thereto and covered the streets with dead and wounced wounded blandelinians.

One cause of the slight advance thathmorning was the severeity of the Glandelinian rifle and artill any fire, at one section of the battle line usually knowing the wear-ness of hemnity, the enemy had store immense quantities of champagne, and other wined, hear, and aprils and streets next to the rammarte, expecting that the christian though proched with thirst and excited by the sight of these lux lessuries a would fall into the snare, , , , and dr into accomply that the fighting power of the christian force would be for a while seriously impreed, This t scheme and lod the alandelinian troops to neight, for soldiers who came upon these, only stoped long enough to refill their canteens with the luxuries, and deliberately destroyed the barries and dumed the rest into the streets, and applying the torouch set the wines and brandy aflame.

Despite the resultes of the christian near lite the forful fighting continue continued, as they were crazily determined to carry the city or dis.

From house to house the christian troops fought their way frequently when the streets were so swept by terrific rifls and machine g un and rapid fire guns that it was impossible to progress there, making their way to breaking down the smaller walls, and so working from one house to another or from one district to another, uring these terrible hours guns and mortars and other pieces of artillery were gradually brought into the city from un sed christian batteries and placed so as to shell the many houses defended by the enemy.

In the meantime the Bixty First corps had arived and the pourth O:Grand pivision and they made a rush at the great magazine and city battery in ft Certudes Park The plandelinians offered more fiercer resistance than it could take a million volumes illy this to describe but it was in vain, these christian troops rushed through all obstacles and reached a long Glandelinian battery which cannon were crammed to the muzzle with grape and can ister and which commanded overy approach to the great Park. Here one hundred and sixty five cannon opened upon the assailants, and mowed down the entire line of troops in front at one discharge, but before they could be reloaded again the ghristian troops behind rushed among the plandelinians and the gims, and the landelinians were so stricken by the rapidity and dash of these christian troops that no matter how desperately and couragely couragelously they fought, or no matter what they sacrificed to stand ground they could not bear up in the face of the onslaught, and like a prize fighter knocked out, they had to ta e the nine counts and retreated, but poured a sudden withering fire as they fell back destroying the first of the onrighing christian column to the last man.

General Calaban who led this one laught stated after wards that he had never seen Glandelinians fight so stubbornly. The one hundred and saity five dandelinian gurs and an ernormous supply of amunition fell into the hands of the christian asseilants, and a great many of the gurs were at once turned against their late owners. The clandelinians valled and made one desperate counter charger after another in endlans flings, and bangs. but the gurs and the christian infantry fire i annihilated the charge as fast as they came on, and the Glandelinians from sheer horror fell

38 back to the rour. To how by how the most desperate fight went on-A pa 11 of heavy smo a from handreds of burning buildings hung over the A part of nearly smore from numerous of outroing collatings many over the city. From either side hundreds of cannon and mortars, played uncendingly while the rattle of millions of rifles, pistols and mankets, the crash of falling houses, the shries of momen, the screams of children, and the shouling of countless numbers of man, the boum bang of shells exploding in the streets and above the city in an uproar wilder than the most insane thunderstorm mingled in a chaoss of sounds. To the credit of these Clandelinian soldiers who happened to be the Scoolliers be it said, that infunited as they were by the thirst for yen gonnog against their christian assailants, and the heat of the reightful battle not a single case occured, so far as was discovered of a christian woman being ill treated, in a let or fired upon -- although the women and children had been o and were present in the conflicts and constantly accompani accompanied or chosed on the charges of the christian troops.

To the christian soldiers however met with in battle in the town no mercy was shown, every christian soldier captured was at once out down or bayoneted and the same fate befell all townsmen found fighting against them or sniping from houses and atreet doors. The rest of the men while the battle was in the wildest progress and it seemed evident the christian would destroy the christian would be christed when we would be christian would be christian would be chri were before the fighting was over parmitted to leave the city unmolested. although large numbers of them had been a the sharer in the destruction of the shalters of the enemy soldiers. This was an unusual thing among the plandelinians, nomething which as fierce as they were never happened before it might be that the city was in danger of being captured, and the Glandelinians understood if any of the linabitants had been harmed they themselves the same as the Omerians would recieve no mercy.

they changed you into name as the Contrains would receive no mercy. Fearing this anyma; was why they gave no quarter during the fight. to the christian soldiers they captured. Thom the time that the christian soldiers burst through the breaches an exodus had begin from a portion of the town of the inhabitants on the other side, and across the big bridge over the Vantura Stream. The or christian heavy some could have destroyed this bridge, and the christian cavarly might have awapt round the city, and cut off the retreat on the other nide had they been goldiers of the foo, but is they were refugees nothing was done untill they were over, and then the bridge went to pieces into a terrific explosion that shock the goods.

They ou had forgotten the provert that it is "good to build a bridge for a flying foe for the onemy fluding their repress cut off, and fearing certain death against all them unless they could drive the christians at of out of the city, the defense was so indescriably and wildly desperatel that it was becoming absolutely impossible for the christian troops to accomplish it. The defence therefore showed what could be effected by desperate men fighting in narrow or wide streets and city squares, and loss and disasterous repulse along the right wing of the enemy was another bloody evidence of the inexpediency of driving a desperate enemy to despair.

As it was tward noon the christians were so depleted in losses they had to gradually fall back some of the regiments fought feebly and were far from making the most of the narrow streets and strongly built houses. He one desired to be the first to retreat, but all were forced on the christian side by their generals to make off slowly and gradually at the earliest opportunity to avoid the too severe fire of so desperate an enemy. Hundreds of thousands had fallen on the christian side in that city, it was appearing like Unitago when it had its great fire, and the results was most doleful. The christian loss was end in officers and generals, and all the regiment al flags had countless bullet holes in them. Hen grew distrustful of the situation, and minute by minute the retreat increased, the resistance to the enemy's counter storm diminished and the districts held by the once victorious christians grew smaller and stabler smaller. It was true that by true thus allowing 10,000,000 shrwiving thristian soldiers to escape, was to allow them to continue the awful "War storm"in the old way outside the city, the christians to the enemy were dangerous foss beyond contempt, and the results of the horror which raged simultaneously in the two cities, and of Bladerlinia's deliverance soon proved to Tamerline what an adversary general Vivian

The Clandelinians receptured every section of the city, but up till noon the christian position along the St Certrudes Fark still held out. This with that strong wall was a fortified region in itself, the christians were in possession of many cannon. The Clandelinians had tried with their artillery to laid low that wall while the Clandellinin mining engineers had tried to rm a trench to enable a closer rank mange battery to be easily erected to play upon the christians in possession of the fenced in a walls along the Parks Lagoon. This so region was the bothest contented part of the battle in the city. The Sixty First Division of Glandelinians with some Mangaboos, and Growleywogs rewhed boldly forward, though they fell in teeming lines, in ill they got to a long overhanging park hill under which they found shelter, and opened a tremendous fire at the walls and positions in possession of the christian & Sixteen times s charge as fierce as Picketts at Settysburg was made by the christians to disloge this Sixty First Division, and sixteen times that many fell and the charges were repulsed. Along all portions of the christing line the fire of rifle and cannons was so seven with the enemy dared not exposed themselves, general Mic-Hollestinia Jones who was in command of the Clandelinian troops in this carter, convinced that the report that the other christian forces had began to retreat was trus-determined upon massing an overwhelming and alt under cover of a tremendous artillery fire at once. General Dome Homer was appointed to lead the divisions told off for the main duty, which was effected but not without dreadful loss.

For a time the christian fire had swept everything away,, but the Glandelinians were took great in numbers this, , time, and they finally were in possession of the wall. One regiment of fiften fifteen hundred men encountered three rapid fire guns placed in the blacted gateway, and were nearly annihilated before some grenadiers blew the gras and their crews to amithereers.

The news that the Par kwas finally wrested again from the almost victorias christians spread rapidly, and there was a rush to drive the christians further, but to expose themselves too much maint orribilation and the advance of the enemy had to be rade with great caution as every house window, door way, and other objects of shelter fairly stupted fir with rifle and tapid machine gun and the dischars of other arms. The christian troops in their slow hotly contented retreet carried off everything of value in the houses they standoned, and as they left the houses, to cheer the enemys advance they applied the torch and terrible fires were burning unking the ecene as dark as night with so much smoke. It was the consist and most destructive battle general Vivians

At exactly twelve noon, (the boom) the headquarters of this part of the Glandelinian army were replaced in Vantura and thousands of soldiers fought nearly as desperately now to stop if possible the progress of the fierce conflagration, at the Glandelinian Fanners can up the flagstaff against the city hall so lately captured by the almost victorious christ ians, the sent and headquarters of the Chandelinian army which had deluged the city with christian blood, a royal saluta was fixed by the enemy gums, and tremendous cheers arose from the victorious troops in all marts od of the city. The releing of that flag anew, the bounder of those gums was the signal that the christian assault of that morning had recleved its death blow. Over fifteen million Clandelinians were therefore still in possession of Vantura, but the heart of the action here was gone. cheuld gneral general Vivian mass a new assault of the same horrible fury upon the city, it would easily fall this time. Fach body of Clandeliniane during the dreadful battle had fought for themsolves -- for life rather than for victory, and yet had so far won, as far as the progress of the battle may count, and so far it was not even started this day.

The final issue of the struggle was now certain. The enemy no longer had any brigadier generals, or Divisional commanders, a center or a common aim o ail had failen dead or wounded, and the loss among the troops was frightful beyond compare. All the surviving Clandeinian generals who had highither to showed the greatest energy in the fighting hesitated no longer and in holding a council with Tamer line urged him to abandon the titanic content and flee while the fleeing was good. But he refused to listen to reason being confident he bould yet worst general "ivian.

Nothing has been said as to the part the girlscout leaders bore in that fler efferce six hours fighting. They were not actually in the conflict as it was not their place, but they did their own personal scout duty, but they were not inthe fight, though they did specially distinguish themselves in all other ways, and had often v clunteered to carry messages to generals and officers of troops engaged in sto stubborn fight, and in doing so to dash across open spaces and run the gauntlet of hundreds of wifle balls and shell explosions, and the burst of shraphell, and face the peril of falling walls from burning houses, and the danger of meating with b odies of enemies inthe streets, but however they miraculously escaped with out even the slightest scratch. . They had not been present on the occassion of the sad reverse of the assault, but during the 1ull of the battle she had learned where a cartain number of enemy officers were stationed a little outside the city who had had a hand in the massure of her band, and a little later she rode out of her tent and said to

"I intend just going on an expedition of your own hearts, not to go into any part of the battle again, girls. I have recieved word that a enemy general and his officers who had ben been in the massacre at Vantura goad when I lost so heavily in my commades in defending the refugees have stolen awayand have gone to the farmhouse near the one of Allenbergers, where our armies are still in possession. I am going with a squadron of troopers to capture and bring them in. I have some accounts to settleswith them which will be an example to them hereafter and Glandelinia too she cowled for a moment and then clearing her face added "ould you wish to accommany me.?"
"Oh yes of all things The girlscout leaders xexclaimed." out have we any time to get our horses."

"We don't need to modent ours"said Gertrude. " ny of the soldiers will mount is "Several of my horscouts of Penrods autyin surviving parties slipped into that localite localities in the hopes of sit getting some loot and three or four were shot, so we must go at once to capture them. They are some of those who destroyed so many of our commands.

The girlscouts at once went to general Warrow to tell him where they were going no he would not worry about them in case he found them absent. abe absent. As they were the highest girlnout leaders on the staff of the Vivian Girl Princeses, the general at once proté to protested, but there we saw could not atop them purpose, and he of coulse course having so say could not atop them, and therefore gave them a powerful escort of Abyssin Villan winkis cavaly cavarly lie had been greatly delighted in their presence, they had been celestial beings to him, he aderstood how gallent and fearless they were, and derit de and all her higher commissioned followers had so frequently distinguished themselves in the hundreds of dashing exploits which they had executed with their other friends, that even Emperor Vivian, confirmed faithfully and truthfully by Violet, and her slaters had said that they even went far beyond them in all they did, and the perils they encountered, aspecially Certride Angeline and Angeline Bichee ..

A few mi nutes later they were riding at a trot tward the spot where those plandelinian officers had retreated for refugee when their regiments were wiped out at Vantura junction. Their rout ellay across ground hinterto in possention of the enemy, but which now was christian possession, and they rode past hindreds of thousands of fifthering christian wounded soldlers, who were on their way to the Rase army pospital tents. They had among them many wounded Zimmermannian Glandelinian prisoners also who soowled among them many wounded himselfall that the property of first state of the little trop of first state of the Clandelinians see shouting loudly at them"It's better you crazy little fool a minded your own business and don't butt into our own cause. "and other words too many to be put here but they did not pay any attention to them, though when some of the prisoners shouted imprecautions at them Certrudecw heeled and said;

"We can prove to you we are the main commanders here though we're more dutterenipee as you called us. It's to us alone thatbyou zimmermannian soldiers were spared. Bette r look out. We might yet clasify you among the Omarians and live no quarter. Beware. We can be mercilese too."

That shut the incolent Glandelinians up for a season. Therefore not a soldier among the prisoners dared to raise his voice or even give them so much as a black look."

"What are all those strange but wonderful ruine?"Jertrule as ed of Jane Melfort, by whose side she was riding."

"This is the out s irts of Vantura. The smaller houses have gone to dust and ruble before the cannon fire of our artillery but these massive ruins contained or was the south where some of the firecast fighting of the morning oddured. Whit till we hear of the losses in this battle when it is finally over. In my opinion there is nothing in Calverinia or in the world to equal its fury.

mother half hour riding brought them into eight of a migitt ragnificant farmhouses of storr alongside of which was a tall shaft of manonry rising above this now quiet part of the battlefield, where the girlscouts saw more dead lying about than it could have brought them five months to count by tens.

"That is the place we're to surprise and surround. "Sertrude said;

"To bad we will have to laid it low.isn't it not ma nificent."

Indeed near this structure was an immense shaft or to or to er. It seem ed to bebuilt in Stages with a mallery round each. Each Stage soo was different but what we them no one was certain but from questioning scouts they learned that the Glandelinian dicials had halted at this neculiar building. The gates were shut, and it was certain that the Thin delinian officiers wouldhave a large force of troopers with him Teaming numbers of men in gray showed themselves at the windows and on the rooof rouf, and indeed things appeared quite perilings for Sertrudes troop to storm this stronghold. One of the Abyssin William captians however rode,,, to storm this stronghold. One of the Apyssinki line duplants however rode, forward without the slightest hesi'a tipnand pounded on the greattt gate with his sabre handle... A strange little window by the side of the gate opened, and he was asked what he wanted.....

"The general will surrender "he said "if you will have Miss Angelinia Aronburg promise that his life shall be spared, if not he will defend himself to the last, and if worsted will die by his own hand. We glande linians do not fardly believe in surrendering any more than you christian dogs do "Defense would be sucude in itself and absolutely useless. "the captian said. "The force she has here is strong enough to carry the place and our can; one could reduce it into a heap of ruine, and if it did not, the sound of fiving would bri bring any strongth of wirforcements I could expect in the shortest time. She though she is our superior, has no aurthority to give High a promise since your bands destroyed her boy and girlscouts.

"If you give the promise it will be kept"the Glandelinian said. "If you refuse the general will commit suche when the first christian soldier fasses the gate. We Clandelinian would die first before we'd surrender inconditionally."

"I'll consult her in person. "said the captian. At hearing this Gertrude hesitated. It was true by the laws of violet and her sisters she had no aurthority to make such a promise unless it could be proven the Clandelinians were not Omarians. Therefore she only decided on that purpose answering herself to the landelinian thus;

"If you're not Omerians all right, at if you are we're going to give no conditions whatever, What cort of glandelinians are you."

"We are Scood liers."

"You lie." "Pon my honor I don't . Are you blind. dirl. Can't you see my uniform." "1'11 find out first"she sneered."

She sent one of her scouts inder a flag of truce to go in and see

"Un conditional or Conditional, "demanded the soldier.

"Conditional. He and the lives of his followers will be spared.""" In a minute the gate was thrown aside or open, and an aged general came out followed by ninty warmed cavarly men and a host of infantry who had all cast aside their arms and advanced under a glaf of truce. The aged general was nearly ninty five, fortrude had thought him a young man. In ro case Certrude thought now having seen him would she allow him 1) 10 meanacto be executed by the military nince she realized now the old man was clearly not guilty in the massacre of the refugeen, and for the antihilation of her band of child scouts The party were soon on their way to the christian lines. When in the lines he was brought to one of the tents and placed there, and Cortrue Cortrude then said;

"I'm going out again r ight away, and try to catch as many Omarians as possible. I have seen they are the real culprits in the matter as only they annualted the refugees in ambush and caused me to sacrifice my troop to save the uniforturates. If you would care to go out again well and

They were very glad to do so, but they delighted more if they could have the survivors of their band with them and this was readily agreed to, These boys and girls though few in number were very pleased to have the chance to do so and were pleased still more at the news of C ertrudes capture of the general and all his retainers. They were collected in about an hours time and dospite the fury of the battle raging everywhere else, set out. One of the christian spies had reported to Angeline Jennings tint a number of the Omeriane who had particulated in the maco massacre were trying to capture a farmer and his children, and that the farmer was defending his home and children against them with a rifle. The whole

q squadron of child scouts and soldiers hastily rode in that direction and came within sight of the fight. "That's the farm house from which window you see the puff of smoke"Gortride said pointing to a large farmhouse near a number of barns. "Forward. Give tem no quarter." The troop rode forward at a forloadly capit pallop, and the plandelinians seeing them coming ran for the shelter of the barns, jammed the doors shut and opened fire. The troops dushed up from two sizes, and surrounding the barrs dismounted. An above of the Chandelinians had nowien into the farmhouse too, and soldiers were placed at all the various doors of the far who se with orders to shoot down any claudelinians who might come out, and while a flag of truce was produced which stopped the firing, Gertrage

There arose within the farm house a great tunult within the building as the question whenthey they should surrender, or refuse and fight to the last man was argued. Several times the courier not and to as Gertrude if any conditions would be given, but she only ead sheerilyly, that no conditions would over be made with them. The Glandelinians in the farm house saw the odds were against them, that in one assault the troopers could burst in set the collections against the farm house saw and the e Glandelinians, some of them high officers who ware leaders in the Ventua Vantura Poad massacre came cut throw down their arms and surrend ered. The troops who surrendered were immediately put on spare horses under close guara, and sent away, while the leaders too were sent off tward the christian lines.

Then they burst into a little outhouse and here from five to six th ousand landelinianshamy o many of them still armed were assembled. A yell of hate and and fury arose arose as the bands of christian trools troops entered guns were shown threateningly and sabres waved in the air, and many of the rebels told the christians to go "some place". For the little band who entered here while the fight was going on in the other barns the odds were were tremondous, and the boy and girlscouts who entered with the soldiers felt that nothing remained but to sell their lives dearly.

"Lay down your arms and surrender." One of the soldiers shouted in a sterniorian voice. "Was the answer and a number of shots were fired from the crows of so soldiers of the enemy and the bullets whichled over the heads of the Abysinkilian horseen but fortunately none were hit...

"Lay down your arms "accemed Cortride going in de pite the danger." "You little girt girl go sit on a tack.

Ordering a part of the trooper force to remain with the squadron in charge of these things untill some wagon or cartscould be sent for the weapons, Gertrude Angeline accomminied by from which with the greatest difficulty the guards had so far retained the crowd, but held them just the same as they wore threatening to linch the prisoners. There was not a moment for hestation. Certains a raised a hand, and a momentary silence followed. 2.2.2.2222222

File the Glandelinian guns were saluting the raising of the enemy flag once again in Van turn, withthe recepture of that place and the driving of the contestion assallants out, general Richardson Haleted, Greatheart and many other christian generals who despectately fighting their warm to stricklered, and here the battle was still still more severe. The reaction of this portion of the battle started earlier than it did at Vantura. General Greatheart was the first to advance and he crossed Vantura. General Greatheart was the first is it to advance and he crossed the Vantura liver, brushed aside the enemys ficrosest opposition along this point point, and after three hours much under a tromendous shell fire, and his men galled by rifles and machine guns drove the onemy to shelter and captured the position. The Glandelinian left wing at this seation which could have arminilated entirely the christian assault was defeated through the blundors of its general, and his position too fell into the hands of the angelinans. All the enemy stores and the baggage and minimions were left here in their possession.

A strong forge of christian troops under general Opraha was left to hold it against all kindelinian counter "storms" and general Greath Greath head at the child have an and freshi his four through two lines of orchards and fields the strong ty defended by the Clandellinians, and he indeed was flabbergasted at the deeperate four of their fighting. He came just in time to support a portion of general characterials arm for the enemy had driven ten mines

The desperate fighting of the decadful day before had however terrible of plated concern Miderline a clorices army which had performed the face of such as real magnitudes army which had performed the face of such as such a second breaking devices and difficulties. Out of face of such as such bad defended this portion of the christian position, more than a third were dead, and two thirds wounded, among them not form the such allest brigaries and divisional generals and many other officers. With so deplated a christian force it was evident that it would be hopolass to endravor to carry off the many wounded, the ill, the women and children reference should the army be compelled to retreat during the height of a dreadful battle, and it was then efore determined to hold the position children reference should the army be compation to retreat using the neight of a dreadful bathle, and it was ther effore determined to hold the position with to the last untill further aid arived. The battle here therefore recommenced, but under different conditions, for the increased force enabled the christians to hold a larger area, and although the discomforts, and but the horrors of insane wild fury of battle and the privations were the same as before——for the reinforcements had not come up in the entire army under Greatheart, the other sections having moved on to storm other portions of the landalinium positions and the daner of the positions by being carried bu enemy descults was at an end s.

One noble action connected with the desperate fighting to relieve general gladerlinia's arm should never be forgotten, and was never forgotten by any one who witnessed it.

Before general Greatheart started forward with his own main divisions of troops, general sr Johna his staff general officer arived with full of troops, general sr Johna his staff general however he issued a general nemmission to assume the command. Upon his arival however he issued a general order to say that to general Greatheart who had done such great deeds to relie order to say that order to say that to general Greatheart who had done such great deeds to relively general chaderling, should be the honor of the crowning success and that therefore he waived his en x seniority and would would fight under toneral G reathant greatheart as a volunteer untill the latter arrived.

A more gener ous act of self goodness for the purpose of relieving his changed than this was near accomplished by any other good shrieting. A move gener our act of self grounders for the purpose of testaving his friends than this was never accomplished by any other good christian general before. To the christian general who relieved general gladerlinia in the face of such a Hellish battle line as this would fall honor fame the gratitude of not only Sladerling and his army, but more so of the refugees in the generals army, and all this credict general Greatheart gave to him. He was worthy indeed of the name the men always gave him "The "Fisry Sworth" of Abbieannia. The news that general Sladerlinia was relieved caused almost as much delight to the troops who had tried to capture burning Vantura, as their own successes elsewhere outside of the city had given t them for their anxiety as to the saftyof general gladerlinia city had given t them for their anxiety as to the Bartyor general gazanta and his army had been most intense.

To Gertrude Angeline and her surviving regiment the news gave an intense plansare for the thought of the bfriends and commades they had left be hind in that most terrible situation had been ever present to their be hind in that most terrible situation had been ever present to their be hind in that most terrible situation had been ever present to their be fine faces of the suffering refugees, the tender little girls and boys, the delicate of the oldieren, the horrors that might ensue should the enemy force his way into the refugee camps, and the terror of their the onemy force his way into the refugee camps, and the terror of their friend the Mason Family had haunted them since they left laderlinias command, and the joy at the thought that these were resued rescued from the awful fate impending over them smashed all records.

Following greathearts arival, came Blain wight Linger, dangerous Nemo and "Desperate Desmond, then Hairbreath Nero and some others, and the Glandelinian forces assailing general Sladerlinia was shattered into fragments, their own positions captured, plenty of cannons and wagons, and the loss of the Clandelinians in officers was ffi frightful.

and the loss of the Glandelinians in officers was ffi frightful.

They had given these christian generals the greatest resistance that ever can be maintained in battle, but all in vain, the christian troops swept everything away, general Greatheart was in the wan, and the whole supported by fresh divisions, poured on fiercely to storm at Ethelreda. It was not only at this place that Gertrude and her followers heard the news, for while the battle was raging so fiercely, they left with the big flying columns of troopers under general Baldwin which was ordered to support the rear of the assaulting christian columns to sweep round and try to surround St Ethelreda, to clear away the bands of landelinian cavarly which infested the intervening country, and then to drive the enemy from the position near Vantura road while the main columns not in battle from the position near Vantura read while the main columns not in battle yet were to advance to force the capture of St Ethelreda and smash general Tamerlines arm y in two. gladerlinia was heavily reinforded with troops Tamerlines arm y in two. claderlinia was heavily reinforded with troops and artillery. Gertrude Angeline and Angeline Richee being well acquainted with the country in this territory had decided to lead this column of Calvary for Baldwins desire, as Gertrude herself would naturally on the first opportunity resume command of what is left of her regiment of the first opportunity resume command of what is left of her regiment of boy and girlscouts, which was at general livians center where she had left boy and girlscouts, which was at general livians center where she had left them, while Angeline Jennings was longing to see her sister and some of them, while Angeline left behind. The advanced position of the Clandelinians the others ho were left behind. The advanced position in the Clandelinians were found not far from Vantura Road, and were defeated without difficulty and after several minor s conflicts the troops moved has lity onward tward the min position. As they deployed to the right a heavy battery of hidden artill ery opened on them with shot shell and grape, an infantry fire of exceeding fury reared out from hidden positions in a long stretch of woods, and then a large body of clandelinian cavarly dashed upon them as if they were a sus sudden tidel wave..... Then a section of the Glandelinian infantry rushed forward with all their bravery and the shock of the attack was so severe that for a time of fifteen minutes the christian line was rolled up in the frightfulest confusion, and one of their brigadier generals fell at the first fire. w.3. But however the christian troops were always inured to all symptons of a war, and with wonderful rapidity thouse who had been driven rallied and made a counter assault, and finally hurled them back with wade wholesale salguiter slaughter, and captured fourteen battleflags. They had with them a great convey of seige material and plenty of provisions. The sixty Fourth pivision which had done so much fighting in the other days of the gigiantic battle were allowed to rest for the re minder of the day. ... 2.2.2.2.

The other troops pre paring for the advance was increased as soon as general Vivian could mass up the troops, and by the arival of general Walter Jennings, who with two hundred thousand cavarly beside his million infantry, had also a troop of Nine hundred and fifty thousand abbicannians. They had had heavy fightinh on the way down, and had protected their convoy and heavy seige guns which they were in charge, and had defeated the enemy and heavy seige guns which they were in charge, and had defeated the enemy four million strong in a two day fight far on the left, and captured all his guns but with a loss to themselves of nearly one hundred thousand men in dead, and six hundred thousand wounded. Soon after the commencement of the fi fifths mornings engagement at St Ethelreda, general hoswell Buster Johnston who was in main command of all this column, was wounded, his aiding lieutenant was killed, and general Melsonia who took command also was wounded rive times an officer took command of the divisions only to be Killed or was wounded, and the battle raging along this portion of the line was as violent as any could possibly be.

The astonishment of the many thousands of refugees in general slader linias army at the disaster to the Glandelinian assailants, and of the strongly massed reinforcements ariving for the christian army was an strongly massed reinforcements ariving for the christian army was in bounded. During the hull many of the new y newly arived soldiers went about glader links cames in platoons siding the many wounded being brought in Greatly de lighted they had been when they had been able to crush the fury of the Clandelinian one lought.

ernormous numbers of troops and that general Vivian himself led his storm with the utmost determination to carry the city, they went there with what was left of their troop to witness the fray. They were in one of the streets which had been carried when Gortwide said;;;

"I believe we had better turn angeline. "These furious Clandelinians are rallying arain, and those secreting c scoundrels would be only too glad to put a bayonet or a shot into us, and we might be buried away under ground in one of the city done and no one over be the wison for it. I have no dout do bt it will be a long long time before any army can carry Wantura. See the Glandelinians are coming in a counter charge with terrible fury. 2.2.* terrible fury .. 2.2."

Gertrude and all the others turned to retreat, when Anne Angeline Jennings said;;;;

"Listen?"
They paused, and in another section where they thought it was still they heard a confused sound of shouting and a noise as if of a terrific tubult tubult. They listened attentively.
"Gertrude Perrod said or exclaimed;"I am sure some of those shouts are worlegn . Some poriegners have got into a row with the Glandelinians.

Come on. We must say e the strangers at all costs. "so Come on We must save the strangers at all costs. "So saving he dashed up the narrow street, accompanied by his followers with all their pistols drawn. They went down two more lanes which were very wide and then in a large open space they saw a crowd of Clandelinians coming driving a large platon of christians before them. The leaders of the hard pressed christian troops seemed to be or leaners. "This is a most serious business" Gertride said "as they ran. "We are in the worst part of the city. We will have to avoid this or we'll all he lost this time. Three are four more ran immeds of the enemy as they the worst part of the city. We will have to avoid this or we'll all be lost this time. Three or four more regiments of the enems as they retreated to the end of the lane came into sight, and a sound or two of them rushed forward to prevent their passage, but the child socuts fought their way through, and shoulder to shoulder charged the crowd of Glandelinians in the van. all through the city the second fight had been as desporate at the first one.

Reinforcements for the christian troops were griving however and the Glandelinians were counter attacked but that d'd not relieve Gertrude and har followers from the assault upon them. They stretched four or five Glandalinians upon the ground, and two of the child scouts were blacking from bayonet cuts. The Christian troops gave a cheer at the sight of the reinforcement and tried to storm those who were menacing the child the reinforcement and tried to storm those who were menacing the chis social, and the infiniated related rians drew bace for a moment and then being reinforced resumed the assualt most florcely Oerbide and Penred had drawn biber little subres, and for a minute they and all their followers fought for their lives back to back Ir was evident however that this could not last for as the Glandelinians were being victorics again, every moment added to the numbers of their foes, the Glandelinians expecting from every parter.

"Now lade and winle "Pennod shouled "Get nouse to asselves ready, and when you get yourself ready, and when I signal the command altogether deah for the this house at the right connew. The door is open Thank Heaven. When we are once in there we can hold it till help comes. Press them a bit first as that as the ast in active them a little, and then for the rush...

Are you all ready. Thow......."

With a cheer the boy and girlscouts hurled themselves upon the nearest place no of Glandelinian troops in a body. The sumprise added to the weight and force of the charge, was innest labe, the clandelinians were cut down or shot in greater numbers than was desirable for them, and before the enemy guite understood what had hap a happened, all of the child scouts were safe in the house, and the door slammed to and bolted...

"See. if there are any win dows they can force their way in at..."

A number of the boy and girl scouts man into three or four rooms of which only on the second floor the house consisted,,,,,, but the windows in these, for some reason or other were strongly barred, perhaps the place may have been used as a propice of nearmy soldiers, There was a furlows beating of rifle butts at the door, and should of Down with the little chulction dogstoutside.

"It's strange they did not use their rifles or pistols" Radcliffo said as they all gathered in the apper rooms "We should have been playing the harp with the angles, if they had done so."

"I I believe they thought they could do us with their bayonets and daggers"

Angeline Riches replied , , "

"Maybe they thought of capturing us alive said Gertrude.
"Let them try it said Janie Turmer.
"Now late said Angoline Jennings to the coriegners whom she and her friends had rescied; "Now did you got into this row with the Clandelinians." seeing you are not in uniforms but in civilan clothes?" and this question was asked a little sharply ... 22

"Well Miss Girlscout"said one of the oriegnors"We were some of the refugees in the christian army, and when the christian troops charged into the city we thought to go along with them and getting here we got lost altogether especially when the Clandelinians began to repulse the assault. hell we saw we had fallen among Glandelinians of the fiercest type. We thought the Glandelinians wouldn't bother us because it was said they don't patyany any attention to oriegners, but they saw us in their counter charge and about a score of them made for us with b fixed bayosts bayonets. We at first ran for it as you may well imgine then they all began to give forth that "terrible devil yell" of theirs full of blashemous words and curses. Seeing that it was either fight or die for running we drew our pistols and fought them desperately. We shot down about ten of them before they could reach us, the whole five of us! There were to many of the enemy though for the more we shot the more there came, and we were well nigh carried,,, by the Clandelinians when you and your little squads care to our help....

at this moment a terrific enach was heard below, that proved the door, had finally yeilded, and the crowd of Glandelinians rushed into the lower part of the house. When it was found to be empty there was a little dl

"They are coming" and no of the origeners as the house trembled from the right of a body of men up the stairs. For a moment they fired upon the clandelinians but could not stop them. Stand well out of reach everybody, and cut them down as they entered the door.

Pushed from behind as they were half a dozen or more of the Glandelinian soldiers forced their way simultaneously into the room, crying"gurrender you christian dogs or we'll give you no quarter".

"currender you christlan dogs or we'll give you no quarter".
"Try and get us. "shouted Gertrude, and ere the Clandelinians could fire a pietol or even put themselves into an attitude of desperate defense they were cut down or run through the body. Certrude then drew a tramendous greened from her greened holder, and it exploded on the steps with a tramendous crash, and a wild cry was heard while a different noise as of the fall of timber was heard. "Hurrah "oried angeline Richee. "Your greened had demolished the staircase and it has orashed down with everybody on it."

Many groens and yells and shrie's, were heard below,,,, then there was a sound of persons being carried out, and then for a while everything was quist below, while outside the hubbub became greater; and and Gertrude "What is all the confusion outside from "as led Indcliffee, and and Gertrude and he peered out of one of the small windows into the street.

"That hole is made big enough" Radeliffe cried at last"We have not made by the fire.

"That hole is made hig enough" and all watched anxiously the progress made by the fire.

"That hole is made hig enough" and all watched anxiously the progress moment to less the flames are now seething through priions of the floor.

"I'm George climb through the hole, now girls follow in turn."

All of the girls went rapidly through the hole.

They were soon gathered, on the roof of the last hou house of this district, and threese minutes later were driven from it now not only by the flames but by shells aimed at them by a glandelinian battery. One by one they sorambled down even while under fire on to the house below and thence to the side walk below without a loss of a single commade...... Then they passed through the house into the opening of the city square and the contract of the side walk of lames, the opening of the city square an ernormous archy wall of flames, the flames were rushing from every window and towering up above every roof, almost meeting over the Square upon the other hand, the battle was raging, the christian troops was pressing forward with insattle flame, all was wild confusion and terror. men forward with irestible fury, all was wild confusion and terror, men

As the recent great floods in Calverinia, so was the confusion now and in all excitement all was forgotton about the child scout fugitives

For an hour and a ju quarter in the face of great peril, and from shells hitting the houses they all labored and toiled assiduously, and many a bedridden old man or woman, or a frightened child, did they finally rescuered the state of the street lane was an open space of some extent and here piles of house hold goods in the midety of bodies of those fallen on both sides and helplose people were gathered in great terror. At the end of that hour and a quarter they heard the battle recode far through the city, showing this time the Christian were victorious, and then there came a deep tramp, an and an ernormous brigade of win less led by general Hendry Dargor filed up through the street. THE MAIN DESCISIVE ACTION FOR ST ETHEL REDA.

IN the meantime during these events, general Richardson Halsted, with Fredrickson Halsted and kindernine, with five hundred thousand of his gallent Angelinian troops pressed on from Vantura Road, moving forward with them the heavy soige and other guns.

An hour or so later they took were joined by general lain Night Lingers main column, which had been encamped on the shores of the stream and in communication with the christian forces holding that position. simultaneous to this General Hendro Dargar the Gemini, and Cingigore arived in camp with immense forces of troops, and their coming was hailed with delight by the embattled christian armies who now felt sure that the hour was now at hand when the city of St Ethelreda still smouldering in its vast stretches of ruins was to be soon in possession of the christian troops.

The total force that moved up thus to aid the embattled troops were, the Calverinians, the Fifty Third, and Saventy Sixtus corps, and the Minty Ninth corps of i Infantry, two divisions of concentials infantry, and the largest force of Abbicannians yet to have arived. The cavarly consisted of the Minth Carbineers, and dotatchments of Demioblan Dragoons and Calverinian lancors. The sattliery comprised the main of Rilw Saldwins battery with three hundred and eighty eight heavy guns, twenty guns of the Royal cores artillery, six hundres light field pieces, and a heavy battery of they not a fire guns, and nice hundred and supporting seven gathling and rapid fire guns, and nice hundred thousand supporting

On this morning one of the civilians of the city came into the christian position. He had disguised as a Gladdlinian started the evening before wr from the city with a guide, had swum the river, recrossed by the bridge, passed close to one stretch of the Glandelinian position and finally made his way in safty.... He was perfectly acquainted with with all I the hadolinian positions and brought plans for the guidaliance of general Vivian in his main purposed adfa advance... After an examination of the plans, general vivian determined that instead of forcing his way through the narrow streets, and amidst instead of forcing his way through the narrow streets, and amidst the smouldering ruins, he would move a large force of troops partly round the city, and assault by the western rural buildings. These if in possession of the foe could be stormed and captured one by one, by a series of seporate assaults, and thus the city. Could be approached with far loss loss than which would have occured in an attempt to force a way through the crowed city, and endager the terrified non-combiants as well. Therefore general hand blac-Halley's divisons pushed on, through the Norm Wood droves, defeating quite a large force of landelin lans which attempted to stop their way. was still using crutches had heard of the disaster to Uertrudes squadrons cat "Her bettle of Vantura cod" as t she and her boy companion were on their way to St Ethelreda, but since then no word had reached them, and they had to avoid the big battle was that was so torrifically raging. Gertrude angoline and Ampoline niches were more than delighted to meet them again,,,,, and the whole of the army even who saw them arive vied with each other in the heartinose of the the wee welcome accorded the two. Unfortunately Joans eleter Minorva was with Radeliffes troop. Jean was surprised to see how dreadfully the battle had lessened the number of Gertrudes troop of scouts, and of the fifteen hadred boys and girls who had been so long under her and been comrades of Jean and Juck not more than fifty now remained in the ranks, those not having died being in hospitals.

Jack not more than fifty now remained in the tanks, those not having and being in hospitals.

It was rather early in the morning when they arived, and Gertrude did not find it out untill two hours after the ap capture of Vantuma. Soon after this the whole troops moved forward. The Seventy Fifth orps to its intense disappointhent was ordered to stay and gward the fear with its immense accumulation of t stores and munitions, and the rest of the fighting troops turning off from the direct Vantuma road and following the lines Certrude and her followers had traversed,,,,,, when they made their way into gladerlinia's army moved forward to storm with all their might the whole of general Tamerlines Center....

The Rebel Angelinian troops in gray who had anticipated an advance by the direct direct line taken by Halsted, and who had made immense preparations for offense in that quarter were taken aback by the movement to the right, and no opposition was experienced untill the column approached the beautiful meadowns and level glens.

Then from positions of the enemy miles long a simultaneous rifle and man retry fire was opened upon them. Fortunately for the first long line of christian troops the snemys fire had either too long or too shorts a range for that fire of the enemy was withering enough to have wiped out the whole christian christian advance. This gave the advancing troops time to secure means to advance from shelter to shelter and return a storm of

They checked the christian advance at this section and drove it back with greater loss than ever, and as many cannons were brought up on their own side of the stream the christian wave at this point made to further attempts on the offensive, and retained the defensive.

The result of the fighting more than answered the commander in chiefs expectation on the foe side, for not only had his troops finally regained their commanding positions, from which the whole of the chistian christian advance could be shelled and blown into the air, but a large convey of provisions and stores had been captured in the repulse of the christian and stores had been captured in the repulse of the christian are been of clearly long of the land. 222222

This day however for general V Ivian anyhow could be colebrated in the anals annals of the Christian Military istory as that upon which some of the bloodiest and fiercest flighting fighting which ever raged with general viviane army occured... The clandslinian positions were in long lines of high breatworks. At a short distance offi from the stream was a long angle of trenches supported by a wall of oith. This wall of earth was loop holed for rapid fire machine guns,,, and a large opening in the wall made on purpose had a row upon row of heavy artillery placed in such position as to swepp an an advancing christian army right and r loft, front and rear, and had a ray vory strong into infantry line behind it. In front a hundred yards distant was a fortified oncampaont of very large size also held by the main army. All the positions were defended by heavy masses of troops, while a woods beyond were held by an immonse division of the best cracychot rifle man of all the Glandslinian army.

The column of christian renewed as a nult was commanded by general innorm, he had twe nty Divisional, and fourty Brigadier generals under fine, his advance of troops was excessively immonse, and as it crossed the stream in a very long wave by wading and advanced a tremendous artillery machine gun, and rifle fire was opened upon it from the villiage of camps which formed the advanced post of the enemy, and three quarters of Tin Horns immense division was wiped out, and had to fall bact. The line of immense division was wiped out, and had to fall bact. The line of battle however was reinforced, the columns broke up into a training square and advanced steadily, and half way reached the villiage only to methest the same dreadful whole sale slaughter and general winhers was slain and half of his general officers too.

General vivian investigating this dreadful situation saw the position was impregnable, and he ordered his heavy shell guns to open a curtain fire upon the camp life position. As he rode back and forth to give the order properly he was shot from his horse and borne to the rear severely wounded for a time the confusion enused by this diencter was was impregnable, and he ordered he heavy heavy code back and forth to curtain fire upon the camp like position. As he rode back and forth to give the order properly he was shot from his house and borne to the rear severely wounded. For a time the confusion caused by this disaster was terrible, and taking advantage of it the enemy issued forth in a flood of me n miles long to storm the christian position in turn and hurled half of the christian troops out with great slaughter. It was general gingigore who in such a situation saved the day. General Myletze indersonia led this terrific landelinian attackylich swelled again the christian line as if it was an erm ernormous san from an overflowing occas and m for an hour the enemy held full sway, but general Gingigore seeing the danger and finding out that the army was without a head, and absolutely leader less, as indernine and plain rightlinger too were wounded, assumed the full command himself.

He watched the enemy coming raging forward with a fury as if they were all the fiends of hell on a wild ramage with Hell to back them, then he hastily sent this message to general Ealdwin;

"Your gung to the front Hurry, Advise general Jack Evans to fall bac or he, il be trapped and annihilated. Centell general Haisted to sover the rear. The enemy is advancing with irrestible force. No delay. Gen r General Vivian is shot. Hurry."

Indeed the messenger reached general Baldwin but the message had not needed to have been sent about the guns as they were already in position and masked. But he had a reserve battery of higger guns. It too some time to bring the ponderous sixty eight pounders and higger centemeter shield guns into avtion action and position, but as soon as all was in position Baldwin first sent the messages to Evans and Halsted, threw his own heavy infantry into line of battle, and awaited the retreating columns. As soon as they had passed through the gaps opened for them all the guns opened at once and ture and ripped the enemys immense column to pieces. Wyletze ndersonia was mortally wounded, but however the glandelinians though astonished by the terrific fire of artillery charged on, and rushed and swarmed among the genn, and f could meet chattartely, their leaders leading their troops gallently forward. The non-fell however as fast as they swarmed among the gime, either shot or cut down or bayoneted the christian infantrybbohind the guns joined in with their own fire the christian infantrybbehind the gues joined in with their own life and after fighting for twenty minutes and striving most despectably to press on, the enemy to avoid ann lhi atton as more and more troops concentrated against them had to recoil recoil. The Glandolinians however had won the christian position and were leathe to give way, and fought with the energy and desperation of as many Glant because, but the gues of Ealdwir e batteries blew the captured christian positions into led by Faldwin the enemy gave way and fied to their own positions.

At the height of this repulse of the enemy reneral Faldwin recieved a severe shoulder wound, and his horse was palled.
The christian gums were now pushed forward,,, and their fire directed at the Glandelinian positions and the strong fortified camps. The enemy replied with a heavy hurricane artillery fire of their own and the uprear was record breaking. The concussion of so many cannons and explosions was so terrific that the men of both sides could not hardly remain on their feet, and the trees of the forests in the bettle zone shimmind with the feet, and the trees of the forests in the battle zone shimmled with the feet, and the trees of the forests in the battle 2016 shimmled with the vibration.

At this time Singipore ordered an assault. The Fourth Calverinian division had been directed to lead the "storm" while the Minty Third Abs Abyasing illan Corps, and the Fifty Third proved division and other calums were to cover their advance, by their rifle fire at all points from which the enemy were firing. Fire proved however were too impatient to be at the enemy to perform the mitlent role assigned them, and so joined the other troops in their one laught... The landlin han fire was so flerce and searching that along the whole line of advance it cleared the way before it, but the other lines of christians not annihilated rushed on ith a speed and ardor so flerce and rapid that the glandelinians didn't have much time to reload their weapons, they were too close for the enemye higger cannon and the troofe though mowed down in long teeming numbers pished through and over the Glandelinian position on the right, and though the enemy mustered in great force to repel them with demonical fury they now couldn't stay the great long of the litter a wild desperate conflict, the enemy repelled the assault with all their might, there ensued a most frightful struggle, two million of the Omarians here held the position, and those refusing to retreat even when the way was open to them fought with the energy of desperation and despair. Nothing however could withstand the troops of Ealawine command, mad with the longestived thirst for revenge, and attacked with the cry--which in very truth was the death whell of the enemy enemy member Abbieann on their life. It was a fearful merciles death struggle. No quarter was assed or given. Some alandelinians started to retreat, their commades on their lies it was a learrul moreless death struckle no quarter was asked or given. Some clandelinians started to retreat, their comrades shot them down it was a most stubiour, furious desperate strife man to man desperate clandelinian against furious Abbieannian. However in such a man desperate Gandelinian against lurious Activannian However in such a strife weight and power tell their tale, the Clandelinians were reinforced and not one of the two million three hundred thousand christians out of five, who crossed the Landelinian position escaped, thatbamny of their dead bodies and one million of the enemy's were the next day counted within the position and out side of it, and the remainder of the christian line

The Christian troops along this line and bow everything into the air. The Christian troops along this line however had fought with some better success and they had cut their way into farmer Browns Orchard and captured a position of the enemy on the right of the Cow Pasture. Il Nome moved forward, his batteries were in position and in action fiercely ag if he were on a ship and fighting his ship and in action fiercely ag if he were on a ship and fighting his ship and and air,..... General keme and he restroops rushed forward to the assault with tremendous fury. It was an action o probably unexampled in any battle of the war before.

in the battle yet, and he ordered them up to the attack. He realized that the Thandellnian position in Farmer Browns farm wan a very strong one situated on high rises of ground and on an eminence, with flanking woods and fields of corn. The christian guns reopened with redoubled woods and fields of corn. The christian gums reopened with redoubled vigor Jon the enemy position here and effected a serious breach in the foe'lines and tore up a good deal of the position, but still the enemy was too desperate to give way. The left of this foe position was also greatly annoyed too by the christian motar batteries in an advanced post of the christian position—but the enemy did not seem to even mind it at zall and returned as hot a fire a they could. Determined to silence the foe batteries the wood was given for an one laught, and all the christian forx—force—cambed forward, and despite their axful losses which was that whole teeming lines were away away as fact as they came on, finally sur mounted all obstacles because the enemy fire had to elacken because the gums grew too hot, and they carried the advanced position with the bayonet, and a long observatory behind it was also most gallently carried by the christian troops, but they couldn't peneture any further, and had to be content with what they had captured.

In the meantime rescued and reinforced general Sladorlinia was not idle. On the arival of the heavy reinforcements for him, and by signals general Halsted requested that Sladerlinia should begin to fight his way forward to meet him, Delighted at having the opportunity to assume the offensive after Halsted requested that Shderlinka should hog in to fight his way forward to meet him Delighted at having the opportunity to ansume the offensive after their long defensive action, Sadorlinka's troops assaulted the enemy with great fury and carried two strong lines of works, and then dashed on through a great orchard and despite the resistance his enough made carried all before them with the bayone. At Sumbeam Farm the dof a defeated enemy was relifered heavily, the christian troops met a terrific first that destroyed whole divisions of troops by the score, and drove the remainder back, defeated themselves and with zeneral gaderlinka badly wounded.

It has seen by both sides that it was attackly impossible to cut through each other as both were undefeatable in the whole battle. Yet the enomy was slift hity more vistorious. how the terrous of the battle here had in reased increased as she had left aid i and in view of the general havos that met her view Gertrude was great thy astonished that any one should have survived the long continued bombardment of hundreds of enemy guns. In some respects the change had voteen somewhat favorable. The increase of strength after the arival of Halsted and his force had enabled gladerlinia to maintain his postion and to enable his troop great and beneficial alteration in the internal arangements and external and the extension of the bloody tattle lines held had also aided in improving the sanitary conditions. But the change in the appearance of the battle zone was trifling in comparison with that in the faces of the many hundreds of thousands of wounded, and the defenders themselves. These were it is true still pinched and thin for the supply of food had been reduced so terribly, that the rations had been lowered to almost the starvation points. But in place of the expression of deep anxiety or of stern determination seen once before on every face, all now appeared joyous and glad, and relieved, for the end to the terrible transfer he trials had arived even whether the battle was over or not, and it seems dong before it would be as it couldn't be decided by other side. 2

As Certrude moved along men gl gave her curious glances, almost as if they had seen her spirit, and then as she dismounted and advanced with outstretched hands and proved who she was, greated her with how the terrors of the battle here had in reased increased as she had left with outstretched hands and proved who she was, greated her with cries of astonishment and pleasure for it was natumlly supposed by all soldiers that Gertrude and her followers to the last had fallen in the terrible magazer at Vantura Fond. Vary hearty were the greeting greetings which Gertrude received especially from those whom she met who had been acquainted with her for over two years. This pleasure however was greatly dashed by the answer to her questions responsesceing many friends cand acquaintances among soldiers and officers. Dead, dead in the wounded were the replies, that came to every one of the inquiries after those she had been so well acquainted with and the kason inquiries after those she had been so well acque inted with and the Mason family in whom she had been chiftly chieftly interested had suffered heavily. General Mason was mortally wounded and was expected to die any minute, the elder Mason firl was dead, and really Mrs Mason, Hunny and file were the only survivors, and hundreds of refugees had succumbed to the confinement, privation and by shell fire or by being burned in fires. After brieftly telling how she and her comrades had succeeded in escaping in disguise, after having been cut off when Sladerlinias assault had been so disasteriously repulsed the day or so before, Gattride Angeline hurried so assasteriously repulsed the day or so before, Gertride Angeline hurried offto the house where she heard that the survivors of her friends were quarted. It was some distance to the rear of Sladerlinias army position, for the battle line too had since the arival of general Halsted been greatly extended, and the Mother and har remaining children had two rooms assigned them in a partly battered farm house. With a come heat opened it, glanced at her, gav e a scream, as if she saw a spirit, and ran into the room lengthus the door open crying lite is not it of Gentride.

Hrs Mason toot her in her arms and kissed her as a mother would have

"I am quite in earnest, Edie.2"gald Gertrude. "There's no hardness of getting in if I desire it. The led tape comes at the recruiting stations. You do not need to apply at the stations. You can get the commission from me through the Princesses. There's no red tape here."

"I am quite in earnest about it "Gertride said solemnly. "It's easy when you win our frien dship. You are not too young to get in."
"No real lly Miss Aronburg, se are not y too young "Bite said with a great affectation to grayity. I believe we could rnjoy hide and seek together or eben blind hans bluff but we children now never need to play at soldier we can be real ones even though we are quite small. Here Mrs Mason again entered the room(s de boom) and Gertrude jumping op suddenly, said that it was quite time for her to be off. "I shall only have time to return by the the time I promished? I heard my Grandfather general vivian is seriously wounded. I must go to see him."

"Good bys Miss Aronburg. I hove to see you to morrow again."

There was a he he sarty hand clasp, except that Gertrude clasped little Edie in her arms as if she was her san little sister. Then leaving she paid a visit to where general vivian was brought wounded, and then returned in an indig mant mood to her (what is left) command.

"You are out of gotte this early afternoon Gertrude." Angeline pichee

"You nothheard that general vivian is wounded!"

"You nothheard that general vivian is wounded!"

"You for trudes what's wrong with him! He get's wounded in every battle."

Angeline ichee said almost disgustedly.

"Yes" said Gertrude. "He' always gets wounded. Couldn't sometying be "angeline michee statiated pondered.

"Bell I'm not quite sure about that, Gertrude but then you see, I never was quite sure of it muself that the enemy would believe I muself was ever quite earnest in anything, and that's rather a drawback you know. See how desperate the enemy was?"

"But what would the enemy do supposing they would find out we were sally quite in earnest, and the prisoners laughed in our faces, and told you were a christian deg!"Gertrude pemanded.

"I expect Angeline pichee maid."I should shoot him down as if he were to me a madog, and let them understand we don't stand for such insults."

"Oh nonsense "Gertrude exclaimed testily "That would help none."

Angeline icheethen said;
"Being christians we have to stand for what we get if we wish to get to heaven. The glandelinians don't care a rapt what we do or say they! I'do it anyhow. We have to watch out for ourselves that's all. See how we fared when we tried to rescue the refusee on the road. We lost more than three quarters of our troop a and have't had the chance to ray the enemy either."

"I thin "said Penred mi schievic.sly"The right thing to do would be to rut your right hand on your heart, and hold your left, hand up with the fore fig fore; forfinger pointing to the heavens and say; landelin is Dear I'll leave you now, Men years have rolled our cloude of battle over our heads and when you have massacted enough of us I will return, and prove to you my found affection and my constancy."

Gentrudes eyes opened the widest, and it was not untill he went off into a peal of laughter that she was certain he had place played a foolery on her, and then with an exclamantion of "confound you Penrod" she made a rush at her boyscout friend and comrade, who dodged her assault, and darted off, clos closely persued by Certrude, and as they dashee round a small barn, their light hearted laughter for Gertrude soon joined in the laughter a, dinst herself—rose on the late afternoon air, and the slessightly woundee wounded soldiers smiled as the sound came to them a and one of

General George Cingigore had considered it posis possible that the enemy would upon finding that laderlinia was relieved, and the pray of home destruction they had felt so sure of slipped from beneath their fingers leave their positions not yet carried, and retreat to the open to fight there, which case he would at the advise of general twian after restring the ripped prilops of the christian lines have left agtrong body of troops to guard the captured positions, and have sent forward other troops to carry the rest and bombard the city.

It soom became apparent by the aythe battle still raged so wildly everywhereelse, that not only did the enemy have no intentions of deserting their strongholds but that they were apparently just as unbeaten in the battle as when it first started. To carry the city itself seemed impossible without blowing all the surviving buildings and the smouldering ruins into the air. The city abounded with a palaces and and all sorts of big buildings each of which had also been turned into a fortress, while everyntreet not hit by the conflagrations were were barricaded, every wall loopholed, and house tops had innumerable riflemen on them aided by rapid fire g.ms. As from fourty to fifty million men in the city alone in cluding many millions of well dripped sharpshooters stood ready to defend the town foot by foot, the should the landelinian armies be driven from their positions outside, it was clear that the fighting forces of general vivians army was without hansons support, utterly indequase to attempt so cericus an operation as a reduction of the whole city, exc. It by destroying it by the heaviest artillery fire that could be mustered against it, and to lawe a prilon of the force only would have submitted them to a side sector was selge, with the enecenity for advance advance to their relief. retreat from the captured positions, to carry off all the wounded and all provisions, and to renew the contest on the old scale untill the reinforcements from lane me army should arive, and he should be untill the reinforcements from lane me army should arive, and he should be enough for the purpose. In the meanwhile he had ordered seige operations to be begin so the enemy in the city couldn't escape in case the troops to the positions were finally worsted. His intention too was kept a secret in the positions were finally worsted. His intention too was kept a secret in the lest moment of the retreat lest the news might reach the enemy which from the batteries in their passesion along Vant; Vantura Rum could have who from the batteries in their passesion along Vant; Vantura Rum could have topened and maintained an annihilating fire upon the rods roads and fie his through and along which the somen and children refugees would have to pass and who would have made such a terrificonsia ught along the whole line to be traversed, that it would have been next to impossible to draw off the troops.

In order to decieve the snemy guns of all the batteries were placed in position to play a terrific fire upon the tow; town and a heavier fire of long range batteries was opened on all the strong positions of the enemy until the noise of the canonade far outrivaled the canonading of any big the noise of the canonade far outrivaled the canonading of any big volcanic Stuption. In the meantime preparations for retreat of gladerlin in and the others who had advanced so far were quietly carried on all the army covered agon trains were prepared for the carry away the women and army covered agon trains were prepared for the carry away the women and children refugees, and every one were warned they must prepared to leave that evening, and that no lo luggage beyond a few personal necessaries could be found time to be removed the order a aroused mingled emotions—there was a gladness at the thought of leaving a place where all add suffered so much and round which so many sad ammories were centered, there was repret in giving object to the foe positions which had been captured at such an avful cost of lives, mong many too there was quite to the enemy but there could be no time to remove much one small satched to the enemy but there could be no time to remove much one small satched to see all that could be allowed to each or am small the trunt and as each tried to put together the most valuable of his or her possession, the whole of the shatter ed houses of the refugee camp were littered from and offect end with handagene dresses, silver places am more, would have gladly resigned effects of all sortes. AND so Certrude made off again, and as she shook hands with them he could feel that poor Bile was regreting her departure upon the previous reaction of the terrible battle all the ill and wounded were being removed action of the terrible battle all the ill and wounded were being removed from Vantura Junction. The guns were sent forward to cover the retreat of the shattered troops while at half past three in the afternoon the emigration of the women and children refaces began all had to trot and wal to the dangerously exposed Vantura pead, a road stream with debris, bloody bodies, of the fullen, and anylie deep in dust and in some places exposed to a heavy fire, especially of high explosives that tore the earth uo up into terrifying eruptions that seemed to reach the heavens. There was danger too from the noise of these explosions of all who ventured on this road to suffer shell shock. At one of these points a strong line of covering troops with artillery was posted, along which Certude was on duty, and acting as their director and commander. As each Larty of women and children artived to the spot, they were advized to stoop low, and to run acrosss at full speed, as the road being a little suntthey thus escaped observation by the ruthless enemy, whose battery was at some little distance, but the grape and bullets whistlod as if there was a hurricane overhead, added by the great earsplitting bellowing thunder of high explosive shells, and many were wounded, ore more lor less as they passed.

Tratevening a heavy gloom foll upon all, for onthat day the galleny ga, gallent general landrove, was shot and mortally wounded, and in a few hours breathed his last He was a very good man as well as a gallent soldier and his death just at the moment when the eafty for allthose for whom he had done so much was assured, cast a gloom not only over his commades and those who had cfought a dose retely under him, but on the whole christian nation. All thatovin afternoon since the sant the great convey had been on the move. His for general Currens division served as an escort, while the main chr istian lines were still in fearful action and been on the move hilf of general Currene civilion served as an encort, while the main christian lines were still in fearful action between them and St Ethelreda but the enemy though he maintained an awful fire did not come out to do any more "storming." The whole road under fire too between the two towns and the battle was throughout that aft; awful afternoon covered by a continuous stream of army wagons provision and store wagons. Mrs lineon and her little boy and girl were on horses with their servant, and as the girlscouts had given them basyets of refreshments the long warry march was borne not only without inconvience but with some pleasure at the novelty of the scene of battle, and the delight of air and freedom

General Jack Evans had intended 'ciallow a half at four in the afternoon but as a cont inuous heavy firing was head in the direction of afternoon but as a cont inuous heavy firing was head in the direction of poth Vanruma and Ethelreda, and fearful for the safty of the all important poet of V antum, the commander determined to push forward his army at once. Certr de hid by this time rejoined her little regiment.

"There is bad news and Angeline J ennings" the news is from Vantura. "We wil have to push on with the refugees or wo'll get into another scene as at Vantura with the refugees not so long ago, I expect it will be a terrible three hours march with this converseray see that you all have enough provisions with you for two or three days. The confusion onesweing there is something awful, but if we have everything with us we will be able to manage. I am sure that the tents will not be got up."

I heavyll that they were go prepared, for the first part of this is something awful, but if we have everything with us we will be able to manage. I am sure that the tents will not be cot up. "

I waswell that they were so prepared, for the first part of this retreat owning to the lumpase length of the convoye had lasted an hour or so, then there was a half halt for an hour, and then the journ journey was continued. Many brighted accompanied the convoy, but Gertrude had seen nothing more of her friends. Colonel hand ly wans hower with his troop had moved along the line at intervals, was in conversation with them, and was able at a halting place to assist them to alight.

The news that had aroused the christian army, and worried general vivian was bad indeed. General General Hobert Powenin command at Vantura and been defected by a "einforcing army of the enemy, aided by the troops of Tamerlines reserves, and part of the town had been recaptured. Jeneral Calahan h imself had pushed forward with all speed with a large body of troops with heavy guns so as to secure the safty of the bridge of boats across the stream, for had this fallen into the enemys hands the cituation of the great convoy would have been serious indeed.

great numbers, and a croos caral c overed the christian rear. The christian force on this advance consisted of force on this advance consisted of one million two hundred thousand infantry with one hundred thousand cavarly, and eighty guns. The troop s advanced in a series of long lines, and with a rush, carried the position, defeated the enemy captured many guns, and then other portions of the army pressin. pressing on found themselves in the face of the main tody of the enemy Then for the fir first time it appeared to have occured to the general the that it was impredent to fight so far from the city. He therefore ordered agreerest, and the christian force fell back, closely followed by the microrious enemy. He has lied near the road and tried to refrive his error, but he was forced to continue the overear, and halted for the afternoon as hort distance from the "Massacre neers of a few days before. Even no repairations appeared to have been ade in case of an community account by the enemy, and when at three that afternoonthey came on in immense force and with wild fury, the christian position was seriously threatened on all sides. For five hours then the troops had held their ground nobly, and prevented the enemy from advancing to storm them directly. A large body however moved round to the christian rear, and entered the town, thus getting between the christian forces and their i intrenchments. The enemy hurled a fearful assault upon them, and unable to withstand the onslaught, the orderwas therefore given to retire, and this had to be carried out in such haste that the whole of the camp equipe equipage consisting of five handred thousand tents, quantities of saddlery for eight divisions of cavarly, miforms "for the whole of general vivians army and u vast amount of valuable property of all sorts besides plenty of munitions, artillery and rifles and pletols, and a wagon trair leaded down with supplies fell into the hands of the glandeli mans glandelinians. All these st oves had been placed in an immense camp on a plain outside the fortifed intrenhants. It was a most disasterous affair, and vantum blared with great fired lighted by the victorious candelinians. Puring the retreat a great number of big guns had been partured, and left in the fields, and at dead of night twenty thousand overturned, and left in the fields, and at dead of night twenty thousand men of the Seventhy Forth Division accommunied by a detatchment of men with rapid five guns, movedeilently forward, and ducteded in righting the guns, and succeeded in bringing them off from the very heart of the on the following merining general Evans whole force moved up and went into position to prevent the enemy from approaching the intrenchments. The enemy commander general Turken and Fred Marry advanced his troops The enough commander general Turfen and Fred Marry advanced his troops to the storming, One christian division remined in reserve. The left wing of Evans line succeeded in repulsing the Chindeliniane coming against it, but before it was reported the enemy had succeeded in capturing two eighteen pounders and one big conternator sit shelled gun.

The assault fell heaviest upon general Turpe and after maintaining his position for several hours, in which he inflicted a loss upon the enemy ten times as big as at Celysburg to the Confederates was compelled to ga give way, because one of his generals retreated without orders—a proceeding of which the latter officer was severely censured by all the christian generals, and by angeline miches in particular, who riding on to view this action of the battle, reached the scene of action when it was in full sway, he had said to him sir comstime you'll do that too much and I.l. request your resignation."

Luck the division under general Mic Cantler that suffered most heavily Eveling that general Curren was hard present he led his own army against fourty four guns which we re playing with great effect. With a roar against fourty four guns which we re playing with great effect. With a roar against fourty four gums which we re playing with great effect. With a roar of cheers this christian troop who numbered fourteen generals, and one hundred and sixty five thousand men, advanced to the suport of Curren. Their wa; led across meadows and farms and as they moved forward a storm of shot shrappell, grape and candeter from all the enemys smaller gums was poured upon them, while from the fourty gums came highexplosives master than any one could court them by the hundred men fell, but there was no wavering on the part of the survivors on at the double they went intill within fifty six yards of the gum; and then burst into a charge at full speed. Certude the little dars dovil that she is, dared to follow the charging column to cheer them on by her presence, yet as a constoned as she was to fire she yet felt generat hewildward at the iron examples were charging column to cheer them on by her presence, yet as a contoued as she was to fire she yet felt somewhat bewildered at the iron storm which swept the chieftan line like a comb does through hair. All around her men were fallen, a shell fragment threw off her cap, and a grape shot smashed her little sword off short in her hand. The landel inian artillery men stood to their guns and fought most fiercely affd sans savagely as the Angelinians rushed upon them. Certude caught up the rifle of a man who fell dead by her side, and bayonotted a gunner, she saw another man at four paces off level a rifle at her, felt a stuming blow, and fell, but was up-in a minute again, having been knowled down by a stone hurded by some landelinian who was cut of annumition and had no bayonet a blow which probably saved her life. Ten of the guns were captured and turned in the fos while along a line of action five miles a terrific hand to had conflict raged. Hajor general Hendorson fell dead, captian general unrer, and Captian general Horner died fighting nobly beside him, and the gallen to general Trycone received three burbulets through his body... From all sides masses of the enemy rushed forward to repell this torrific christian assault of Jaof gwans army, and a Corps of Turmerannian cavarly swept Trycone recieved three bu bullets through his body... From all sines masses of the enemy rushed forward to repell this terrific christian account of Jack Evans army, and a Corps of Turmerannian cavarly swept upon them General lane on in Caimsbury was now incommand, and seeing the troops couldn't go any further as the onemys defense was too desperate gave the word to fall back, and even faster than they had approached, the rurvivors of Evans first division retracted literally cutting their way through the crowds of astonished Clandelinians,, which surrounded them. Gertrude was scarcely conscious of what she was doing, and few could have given a detailed account of the events of that most gallent charge. All the men as they retreated remained well together, old veterans in desperate fight they wredered that only in closed line could they hope to burst through the q equally desperate enemy, etriling, shooting, bayonetting and clubbing manket against number and using pistols and always running, they at last regained the position from which they had is used. Of the fourteen thousand the position from which they had is used. Of the fourteen thousand men, eighthen thousand pilled, and fourteen thousand wounded, and ten thousand captured, a striping testimony to the valuer with which the generals had led the way.... Euch shaughter at this among the general officers is almost without parallel in the records of the cristian army inder general Vivian, and many lade and her who went fown or went into the fray low down on the liet of lieutomants and captians were all dead the fray low down on the list of lieutements and captimes were all dead and wounded. Every legiment lost its commender. It was not certiful they allted breathless, and daimsted, wounded and bleeding, that Gert addervise discovered that she had been trice slightly wounded for in the the wild excitement of the fight she had been unconscious of any pain whatever, bulst had made a cut in the fleshy part of her right arm, while another had cut a clean gash just acrosss her hip. Michther was in any way ser loss or enough to lay her up, and having bound them up with her bendage of her energency kit, she remained untill she could go to the militury hospital to have the rounds property properly cared for. She found the hospital camp crowded with badly wounded men, and somen and children who in flight had been hit by shot or shell fragments, and Gertrude seeing the pressure upon the surgeous, obtained a couple of supply of better bandages the medicines for wounds, and went to her regiment to have Bright Eyed Mary dress the wounds for her. As she reached the troop Penrod sprang Mary dress the wounds for her. As she reached the thoop Penrod sprang forward.

"My dear Gertrule, I was just hunting for you. We are going to cross to night. I heard general Evans's troops suffered frightfully. I see you are hit, but Bleesed be to God, only slightly."

"Wery slightly dear boy, nothing worth being frightened about. It has were slightly dear boy, nothing worth being frightened about. "Havenh "Penrod exclaimed joyfully. Indeed that is good news. What pood piece of news."

The ring that something would come amise however because the enemy was storming general Vivians whole line something beyond description now, Perrod augusted that all the refugees in the rear would be safer somewhere else in ease the enemy force the chivistian line to retreat that it was best gfor them to go further, and therefore at her and Perrods orders the whole of the convoy were found gather ed in tents, and orders was issued that in two hours, the women and children would proceed tward general vivians center which was the strongest of all the positions, and under escort of what remained of Certrades regiment, and of five thousand mounted men. It would be a vory long march for the convoy would be encumbered by the long twain of stores and munitions of war too while a large number of wagons were any labels for their transport.

Angeline Riches heard the news early, and understanding how interested her commades were in the matter, she rode round the camp and told them. It alleving them to follow she rode round to lire likeons tent. They had just melved the news and short as the time was pades few preparations to make that they were ready for the starts. A special army taggage wagon, now emp ty was allotted to them, which their betwent riding outside would hold thous with some comfort. these wagons being specially constructed to allow allow the occupants, when there were even ten in them to lie down at full length. But in order to give them to their rightful ownerswhat had we better do with all these things walter. "Gertrude said at last.

"We will get a small chest and put them in Gertrude. "If no one claims them you can give them to violet, and her sisters as a Christmas Prescreent. No jewels would turn their heads. They're too good for that I'm sure. No goodness shown tward them could or would spoil them. "(he was right) "But hew can they recieve them?"

"But hew can they recieve them?"

"But he was right to deneral Jack Evans—he is sending a lot of precious articles captured down under a strong escort—and could request him to let it go to Angelinia Agathia to their father first, and he could give them to him on Christmas. I will direct it to a jewelry center in Angelinia, and will tell them to forward the jewl jewelry to my trusted agent there to whom I will give my directions to sent it to Emperor Vivian who will have them valued."

"But when do we set out to scout and see when they're coming Walter." "

"But when do we set out to scout and see when they're coming Walter."G Certrude asked after they had talked a short time longer about the treasure. "No time seid Walter. We cannot do a thing untill Hanson comes. It's too dangerous and sure when reciering your warning from gladerlinias camp they'll not come nless Hanson comes up."

The next trenty minutes Gertr do and her friends stant in investigating the claim ion, admiring and yet herrifited at the vart extent of the battle and its disanterous connequences, a great portion of the chutchinn army had retreated guite a distance from their former positions, a great partion of the refuseon of St Ethelreda had filed by new, and a good portion of the chirchina positions meanest the city had been elegand amy and ripped into the air by the Clandelinian gone. Elsewhere the fierce fight, the din of camens and the perpetual rattle or ifles and machine gune atill continued with the same dradful fury and of the retreat there was no order, no regularity, though the attempts to rally them was very strilling.

Late that afternoon while the battle was still the same old cruzy "Storm" Certrade angeline and all her force of scouts including Walter Starring were soon on their horses with a troop of irregular cavarly commanded by Colonel Actior George and joined the flying column which was setting out to see the contract of the contract of courts as one to the enemys lines as toosible to see

Gertrude found as she had suepected, that it was a larger opening and from the doorway a narrow winding stair da staircase led to some room far above, from which the roofed dome room far into the air. The stairs were lighted by three windows on both sides. She was thinking as she ran apstairs of the ideas that had crossed her brain the time she had first observed the door ...

"It's all right"she said as she came down again. "See Walter"if the men bring up barrels and boxes and furniture we can form a barriac barricade on the stairs, and defend them for any time a knost."

"Excelleny idea"said Malter.... "Get at it men. Hurry. No time to lose they "ill be less than a quarter of an hour forcing in the door . Form the top barricade first, a few feet below the termice...."

Bath may seized a box a barrel, a b urgul or some other heavy artiel article, and hurried up the stairs. They did not have as long a time even as they had expected, for the Glandellnians did not have as long at time even and were therefore in a hurry, mand finding now strong was the door had increased their banging and viole in themmering with the butte of their rifles who while Gertrue had heard one of the officers outside shout;

"Will the door yaild freeme one said.

"If it don't we'll blow up the whole she-bang and them in it."

This got every one inside who heard this feeling quite apprehensive.

Thus the defenders did not have hardly a ten minutes grace, but so many men acc omplished the formation of the barrians at least had constructed three acc omplished the formation of the barticade at least had constructed three of them. Each was placed a short distance above some opening for light so while they thomselves would be in the heavy gloom, their assailants would be in the light and be exposed to their fire. They left a sufficient space too at the top of eac each barricade for them to scrimple over leaving some spars barrels on the stairs above it therefore to fill up some of the space after forming their position for our midnight meal which we may need "Walter

The details of this day of the britle need not be given in many words but it is erough to predict that during the leight of the contest which had been fiscused this day than any other. The height of probably which had been fiscused this day than any other. The enemy had broken up the christian line seriously, valled up one of its wings, and senetrated the latter than the proof of the contest had to mass all he without the total passible traces that the new thirty mystoriously all array on

After that which was then four thirty mysteriously all array on the part of the bittle ceased, and no further one laughts came from the enemy after that, wing the right despite his wound, general Vivian satup in bed, and had all its generals gathered around him and held a council on how to persue the battle for a final issue, on the following day. Finally seneral Vivian said;

"This is what you had better do general Circigore. Miss our whole army and move it at once in a grand general tremendous assualt upon the whole of the enemys lines at once, close in on St Ethelreda and smash all before you. We must win. This was occassioned by a sideen sudden and most imexpected "storming" arough apon a certain part of eneral general Eunsons line near the left. The enemy covered it when the dreadful care orade that thembled the city. The Glandelinians carried the positions, were regulated at one point tat Leain and again they comed to the assault with over helming fucy and the work of the demon of rain and buttle was done. Our is inn officers of other divisions were account from sloop to find their own troops and whole lines flong from their positions, and retreating in great distorder, man, of their regiments ted and to fragments, man, captured by the advancing enemy or sinned in agonizing suffering ander the surth debris harled upon them by high explosive or uptions. Near a orly denoli ned in that half an nours time.
That half nours time of the reign of the raging fattle hours harror had turned one of the most agains, let probably careless portion of the christ iam line into a wreck and nemalis on which no words can fitly describe.
The coldier not caucit in the dr endfulturmoil stambled and ran inwild paric across the fields, to get ala, from those heaving cruptions, regardless of malforns orvasajons of everything but the mid instic instinct of safty , and a shed headlong thard the year, to hear the bother portions of the line and , eilded to the energy of the pervible Chandelinian forces, and had in sections toon torn and rent into fragments. Hew tircors assailed the fugitives as freeh Skindelinians burst among them dealing right and left with the rays et. Other sections of the christian line however of this ring still seld while the mad terror raged all around the themselet the neaviest of the assault case upon this portion. It was more forcible than the other assault hich caused the scene of description it addred innersely to the loss of life and dread of the officers, and every mea sign done to reinforce the line still holding of the cavarly was sent to try and stem the rout before disaster became ir emratle. The spectacle of the entire retreating columns thus roused suddenly for as lumber by a fierce sudden surprise case ault and next flying from their samps in atter panic in their night clothes were not all annunitated by the victorious enemy is one trut cannot scarcely be richard in words and can be given in any approach to exact realization inly in more narratives of the officers the eitheased the northest of such a "Clande linian atorm" and experienced the sersation to thich it cauted. The The riffic Grandella ian attenuals proved but the regions and discontinue leads described from the least of the tatalogine set of field fugitives has note and there group putches of pine trees in all discosions around them runs into flance from flached caused by shruphell explosions and before treville war up for sum time a doner or more conflagrations among the forests were visible in all sections of the woods and in plant places great ralls of trees troke traith sudden startlingness startling a xideness into flame which et of hundreds of feet into the air.

While the misses of christian troops were stained t, the awful suddeness of the disaster, and while some of the officers for a moment or so stood rooted to the ground or mandered helplessly about in dismiy, there vere anny alert and self pessessed among them who aroused themselves immediately from their dismay and put their energies to meeful ness, one Some of theme having the presence presenceness of mind ordered up their muchine ; in tatteries to cover the retreat of the defeated ing, nor led reinforcements in heavy numbers to the rescuent canchile the noise of configion brought the higher generals out in hot maste to the scene, and they ordered imense bodies of troops forward, and from the location of Lebanon Center came at double quick himsonia joinstonias force of soldiers the Birth Corps ander the officient command of general Hanson Turner of many a battle fame. These coinforcements were at on c put into position before the retreating troop, they were radialed gradually by their communities at this sight of help and the energy then met with more dogged resistance than had been expected, but still tried to pressed on and the fury of the battle became immensurable.

O remail Turmer recognized at the start the great nex necessity of teeping this glandelinian rave of insume makes tack as much as possible ntill more help could arive a pectall, in such an exigency as that which he notice more many count arrive to pecually, in such an exagency as onto them he had to face. At a time all this point, the study into one must call in ted actions and no one must east min a Bingle word of that was gaing in. This is a normal format and single word of that was gaing in. This is a normal format and those forms bird into the tattle with lively energy. The effort to fight the enemys dougled advance has now the flist and greatest duty to be performed but from the start as one enemys artilles, covered the "STOM" it fr proved to be a dangerous and very difficult mark, the set a hopeless time. With fields Shandelinian column making for and ut once in animuense line, general Turners army rould have been insideques to once in an income through a partial transfer of circumstance as he age to the che onen year and in the test of circumstance as he age set terribly ever helmed. As it can be and his officers found thems lives set it as by an all high of heavy field become and by constant use the machine plans here is hot the, had to be given a rest, which was so the advantage of the enemy who however had falten in the most dreadful teeming numbers.

The violence of the account and aleacen ed and broken up the main christian left, and so far ana, 'as the other sections of the min christian army that outside of the troops nurled in there has scarcely any more troops to be had, so that even the divisions of the last cases sent forward to repell the enemy proved next to useless. Heinforcements might be drawn from the center, but the centre of the christian army was six miles or more away, and even if any troops were drawn from there this gready body of the army might prove useless in the stringent exigeny exigency.... The only hope that remained to general Turmer and the others was to endeavor to chec the progress of the advancing a landelinians, by the use of a strong batt ery of neavy centimeter gime, and to withdraw a my the briden portions of the christian army in the line of the progress of the enemy advance as they were a minderance of the defensive lines. This was put in practice without the alightest loss of time, and soon the thunder of man, of shede game began, followed by many terrific explosions among the enemys our mains surjes, many blusts being heard every for reconds even at general mansons headquarters each explasion signifying to him independent by one till the one tiling an amis, and also signifying that none tellimen, of Handelinians age blon to atoms by each explosion.

to others seem the gaps sont in sheir lines one glandelinians advanced, and shough the brave entission generals worked, and their troups fought with a despendion and one long, of the most service type it seemed as if all them shelf efforts were to to stanout avail, the 5 terrible plancelinians pushing on as steadily as if a colon, of roull i secre rad sought to stay their progrecs.

It was with grief and at norvoy that the numbers of benevals generals haned of this steady agree of the army of tuin-liney were seeminly seemingly the grand by one again, the state of the catale alsaster, indeed estained by pare ive in one face of one call and dofen . Lat source one a line is lace, an if stained by Leop Mar and not yet are used to a relligation of the norman of the discussionals and not yet and any time carrys made sain a few months of supplies, provisions and madicals, instantial the viscorious enemy in passession of all this and a vast camp one shortess of assumption made isself apparent from the exist, and actiller; fire and opened upon the christian left from three sides and everybody seemed whill a storm of shot and it shousell, stape and him chapterives .. 2.2.2.2.222222

The proper annous serion could have acopped the asymmes of the los tan even more difficult to obtain, and the left wing was nearly cut off from the main conjution army. Those who postedeed supplies of amountaion alvanced it as fast as possible, but in the face of g ave parti. Thus an Abbiemnian Officer sent fourteen ragons logged with monitions, and the drivers were obliged to pass through a zone of fire, wand a number of wagons were blown up before the train reached its destination .. The conflagrations started by the buttles sudden fury, the swaying and tottering trees burned through, the frequent small explosions, the dreadful noise of hundreds of cannons, the incessent roarin, cruc/s of riles such followed by terrific yells of the victorious enemy rendered the fields and lanes very uneafs for accuting confisting officers, the city of Lebanon itself may under fire, and the insabit ones fled in almost a panic. The ferryboats were crowded with those who wished to leave the city, and a constant stream of the homeless homeless carrying such articles as they had renoued from their homes was continued all day long any they fled in the direction of the north to get away from

A strange feature of the battle was a rush to the forward positions by the S ixteenth Corps sho wis hed to try and stop the advance of the enemy awin ging round in this direction. The enemys advancing columns was yet distant from this location, which seemed destined to be assaulted. The assault came with dreadful violence, and all that morning till ten long lines of christian coops stood before the enemy in fierce desperate resistance, On their side generals Montgomery Watsonia and Sancons were wounded, but the christian troops held on, braving in their desire to unt maintain the position. the fiercest of the enemys assault, and tearing shole lines of assailants to pieces with their withering rifle and cannon fire. Their effort was vain, the Olandelinkans turned their right, and drove it to the rear in il wild confusion . As for some of the fleeing people of the city, some of them in their panic and confusion in stead of Heeing northward wildly fled man the very danger zone they wighed to avoid, but their confusion somehow or other for a time stopped all ogress of the enemy in that direction and it became even necessary for the christian cava 1, to drive them out of the territory before the enemy would fail upon and massacre them...and thus with incident manifold, went on that fatal Fifth of Uctober, the first deams of that dread battle of Lebanon.

It is very important, here to give the official record of the shocks of the violent Glandellu ian one laught, as given by some of the officers who all nessed it, and sho send timely end iald in the end. Seneral Deorge Gross mid in his at itings to general lanson vivian.

"The Clandelinian assault came from north to south, and the only descript ion I am able to give of is terrible effects that it seemed life a storm wave highing a kind corns enors city. I was in bed, but roused from sleep by the first terrible crash of firing. I thought at first that some explosions by accident must have occured dinin the carletian lines, and , began to count the seconds, but as the noise increased I ray idly dressed, went out mounted my horse and rode off to see what was wrong. The shock of the attack came at five twelve oclock in the morning The first o portion of it seemed at first the most severe and it carried all before it. From that time on it decreased gradually because of fresh resistance it ast but did not stop. The on onslaught continued for two hours beingslighter in degrees at that time than in any part of the passed hours, but the battle raged then with an indescriable fury and general Tormer seemed to be nolding his own but with great will iculty. There were two slight concussions from somewhere afterwards much I did not may much attention to. At 8.14 I recorded a shock of an assa alt upon liontgomerys rout iront, which continued for quite long a apace of time, and another one two minutes later somewhere else. The battle then was extending and it was evident Manley was determined to every our big army abide .1 saw many fires, but nothing atong just then seemed to happen in bebanon though the people were abantoning the dity inpario."

"The principal part of the terrific Glandelinian one haght came in two waves. Use as led by general mimmania Shoemania, and the other, was led b, general Jesipine Jensin and be the abits in juknoll.... I saw those the limits column to a fragments by gurners first fire, the first sactes of vibrations from the cannonating of both sides continuing without interruption, and the din was in a grander north concleving to that of a great Volcanic e plusion plus on continuously. I suspected or balieved the vibrasions sould aliate dim also gradually laving the class the christian left 1.5 as routed, but artiliery the occured this remewed vigor at some other coction. Then the hoirs extended to the oast, and the atmosphere was full of tennous motes and the second of the control of the second the second shows the second of the second it is a few integration intensity as to less trescrible procured sollar, and from the observation point to sum to the field displacements of the observation of the contest in left into procured a view of the form Type condition. ahnowed tenn and took of the the his atoms absorbe of the abundantintin announced come from the direction of the nontheast to nonthwest. If the reader desires to discover the lot of desires done by the fierce offendelining a montag gas wit, the fact at and out that the enemy followed as alone upon the metresting columns of the left ring that the fraction of the ranges were in many cases obliterated during the battle by so much amove of the wild fining, and of conflagrations set by the battle. To many regiments of troops fell a pret previo the dwarding enomy or an the dreadful Clandatinian artitlery fire that the not al work of the chalatian officers to restore and in the the short and their mid mid difficult, and the down niture of the diagram in some cases impossible to discover. With fact min on that led to considerable and despite and delar when the question of how the christian left wing not no enally sumprised by the enemy, miny of the officiale having alon confined that write to attempting to stem the disnater and yet claiming examp tion from liability as to what the hat'le mit result in the case the enemy pushed on through very obstacle. Had not this been, there was sure believe believ the enemy could have been benied buck sponner than it was done. Among the chief victimes of the buttle diseases was general Wooden's Fifteenth Coups standing ground at Struct we Juncture.

His right grand divisios was left still intact but the other sec tions was reduced an a man would be reduced to a afeleton with his flash a one and his appressible exposed to the searching air wie center secoiled before the chemys advance and artillery fire in frightful disarray, general Peter St John was morally mortally wounded, his assistants generals San Pedro and Michael Good Child were seriously wounded, and his lieutement general fell dead from his horse s hot through the heart while trying to rally the made stricken troops. General Woodons division therefore was reduced to miserable wheel the communication and the hard made in the Clandelinian agency to his time to ruin, General Post Johns division in handsome is found Court and initially remarkable for the believing it many a battle cleo suffered a worder from the shock of the income come it, its left being badly shattered and injury done to the center while its leader was wounded......

One observer who were a fortegner stated that the ensure like of against seemed to have advinced in a very tregular counselled the ensure room on in a struighter course its hoins helief and driven off in later bours would have been out as ly impossible. He related to general Ben tionen in "The enemy advanced in a long line but twisted up someways live a sarpent in advancing the line never straight, and the chutstian lines had fallen to the rear dearths the confusion in a more straight line which fire out big cais in the enemis columns for every voltay, depend Centers divisions hardly feld the columns for every vollar. Within the next few minutes, after a good portion of general "? manh-In-The-Heads army had been rulied, general Clancy had indeed got hold of the lines of the the "Battle" business he had spent many hours before with general Connel in his orn headquarters the day before the battle came on, and now he was out in the very zone of battle itself and watched every every motion of the defensive lines, and of the terrificchristian attacks. It was evident that general Lenci Fichnell on the christian eide now in command of the christian left wing had been absolutely bleeding the Clandellham column; and had hurled great "storms" against the Ulandellham positions along the Ste Marie Stream, but just then it seemed impossible to detect any facts about the dangers that general Mansons army might scorer or later mistake general Manleys army for an enum empty eggenell.

"What do you make of this general Shoraminis" in asked when he had summarized the situation. "According o what I traced on this map I made my self, eighty five per cent of the army tist moved against the left Wing of Hansons came from general Manleys test troops. That leaves only fifteen

"I guess that good cection of the army sent against the Christian left was ours and we didn't find that out till now. "armered Shoeminnia." gome one was oute and we didn't find that out till now. 'answered Shoemannia. "Some one blundered. I was against "Storming that section of the christian army altogethed altogether. I did the same blunder at Osmendeneen because or the orders of some fool and the same result occured. I feared if Fancons left was pressed out of its position he'd throw his right and center upon us, and with the rest of the army swing a fierce account upon our right, and it has exactly happened."""

"And the Troops standing ground at The Sto Marie liver has been holding dreadfully long against hamy charges irrespective for the amount of troops sent to their aid, and they're fast dwindling away. Way at this rate we have sent to their aid, and they're hast dwindling away. Why at the take we have been practically rurring the battle for imagens Fenfitt, nowever that len't the main point at present we have jet the figures showing how many troops was sent against the Christian Joff, and how lew are remaining to contend with the Christian dogs and they don't correspond with the ammount that went through earlier in the battle..... that threatened or see mingly threatened to make an end of the world before the time in front of his eyes, the fearful conflagrations, the dreadful losses and the mighty explosions that occured among the munitions, and the sad dwindlin dwindling away of the Glandellnian right before the counter Murricane of general Bickhell were the principal items in an annual loss of nearly thirty a million one hundred and sixty thousand men of the left wing along in that one dreadful morning, and through some fools blunder. There were also the dreadful awa lanche assaults of the Abbieannian and the dreaded irrestible and incinicible Abyssin | deian Winfie cavarly. General Dupond had hurled against the Glandellnian center four immense columns of the fierce Domiobiane, which had carried one portion of the positions and tore away the Glandellnian division from the rear nearest 8t Bonifc Fonface's Crossreads and was hunling forward life a flood from a bursted than upon the Glandellnian positions at the Bte Marke. There was some blunder too between some other officers about some of the Ninth corps which seemed to have been ordered forward to the support and to be withdraym before they even got started apparently on account of the uncertainity whether they could withstand general Hanson pleases phristian Abyssinvilians or not.

As for other sections of the dreadful battle the movements of general Dolittles Fourth Corps was also a blunder, and the artillery and cavarly which should have supported the ascault with a strong force of infantry, was frustrated by the christian general Michael Burley who and his staff seemed to have their ingers everywhere for the actions, and the greatest peril Manleys army was really facing was at the St No Boniface Greenwads. This was as bad a situation as a gigantic leak in the hold of a wooden ship in stormy heaving see, and in itself evidence of either foolishness or gross blunder on the part of the one who had delivered the assault against general Kansons left without first seeing to it that the enemy general could not throw against the Claudelinian army His right andcenter. Eo far as general C. ancy could judgelif he could) the christian forces a raying against the Claudelinian masses was bleeding the christian forces a raying against the Glandelinian masses was bleeding the christian forces a raying against the White the assault was so vigorious and strong that he doubted if the Ste Marie positions could be main tained very long, as Shoemannia had said, General Mannon was just "Sitting tight" and waiting it over.

General Cland, as he siveyed the scene estimated that, with the ammount of troops concentrated against the christian assault, and the strength of of the Clandelinian line, and he was confident from his view of the limits, that if he massed troces on time he could show hanson that he we his "equal". This meant that he would have to concentrate fourty million men, against the whole storming christian line.

But Shoemann is and other officers said it was actually impossible to hand be the affair in this manner and to concentrate such a ernu ernormous number of men in a short time against the christians. Examining the Geography farther, he believed he Could sent another division of troops down Stoney River. rith sending troofs to the front as soon as possible for heavens ende be patignt said General Clancy. We shall win, at least enough to save the army indeed if there ever was such a battle which called for systybody on the Clandel Irian side to try and crush the counter christian SIOMM it was now in the battle of Lebaron the bloodiest battle in this part of Calverina — the frondful gly, mauling clashing wrestling decisive battle of the near Abbieann Country and territory. Indeed even now as far as the battle raged the percentage of the well trained vul volunters of the lattle raged the percentage of the well trained vul volunters of the Candellinian army dead and wounded alone, was as heavy as the percentage of the losses in the dreadful struggle at Cedernine and Evangelline together. This was not the first occasion that general Clancy had been fighting against christian avnies in battle, but it was the first time he had ever had to clash with General Hanson the Papoleon of abbieannia. It was up to Clancy to break up the christian assault against the center and the left, and in this scheme there was no shining light. He failed in the cally morning, because of some onestlander in the assault upon the shrighting left, and in this scheme there was no shining light. He failed in the cally morning, deneral Clancy put his own divisions forward near Ste Marie loft, and in the advance of the christians there. He also send for general Frank Daniels divisions and Leo mules army to come up and join in the advance. His integrations and leo mules army to come up and join in the advance. His line less than ten miles was stretched across a triangle formed by the vantura River and the Ste Marie life flane were protected with the water, and swahple and by forests, but his back was the to fight in case he would have to retreat. But liancy did not comtel comtemplate any retreat. He was there to fight. He did not even entrench. There was no time Ceneral Andrew Hatchild his engines said it as was poor ground to fight on. But Clancy Thank's produce and compile had been all day while the Glandelinian gray had been all day while the Glandelinian gray had been almost invisible facing the Gristians were the Glandelinian of Rangaboo state, from Zimmerunnia, from Mornonin, and also from Michigation and Hobbords. Around the buttlefield because of so much terrific cannon fire the surface of the earth was rare, y rarely quite still quivers and slight tremove, unusally imperceptible to many people for away and discern into only in the delicately adjusted sie scientic instruments, were of a very frequent occurance, but they were not strong enough at any great distance to be evident to the senses of the people. Sweare nearest the battle about fifty miles off especially when the cannons were all in general action the concussions were of a mature to mintain the inhabitants of many towns and cities in a state of nervious uncertainty as to the security of their lives and homes, fearing they were either more Explosion disasters as at Abbieann or real natural Earth Convulsions. The concussions of battles on record are very numerous, and these are Lingely those which have pecured during tremendously bloody buttles though being far from fally recorded. One of the first of these mention alight core union of the earth during the Polight Delight's Inchien and Evance linia Canda battles and on the occasion of the Mic-Whitcher Carnonade, which covered a list of between six thousand and seven thousand trumors. Another consume the clight Occasions on convulsion, when the Glande linian divisions under generals Horah, Duthin, and Abhiran ware annuli lated in one of the charges and a again another suggested an explanation of the concessions felt of the Gedernine horm, Evangeline St Claire, Delhoidi and also St Ethe Iradrea.

So far however the Lebanon disaster, considered by general Hanson v ivian as not only a battle, but one of the first severest and remarkable on record included the destruction partial of uis left wing, and the terrible record breaking contest to restore it with reinforcements. According also to war correspondents, and newspaper men the noise of the battle was loader that the noi noises to valence counties outsition on record, and the violence of the shellfire tore up a district of seventeen learnes, and caused the greatest noise heard except that of the Vivian Wickey horror, and Mic Whither, and the violence of the Glandelinian right ving, led by Shoemarnia Josipine Jensin, rumapple, Leblanche, Lafty and others caused a with drawel of nearly the whole of Hansons left wing, twice that morning, the formation of the whole christian line being altered by the destructive ascault, and forced Hinson to use drastic measures to recover the formation of his whole army and eave his left wing, and thereby bring on the first block diest battle of the whole war.

The south of behanon, at the date of this catastrophe contained the aplendid valley of Vantum Rum, dotted with foreats, and flows flowishing tooms including Sodom, Comornin, Zour, and S Zabolim, though not the horrible cities of old, only having the same names, the non combatant men of which had just previous to the disaster, joined forces to help the christians against general Clancy who had superceded Manley. The battle was as fired as if a dread subtervanean force had assilted their country and spreading dreadful desolution in the flourishing valley in which their tooms t stood. Naver before in an battle did the enemy nor the christian army Suffer such a great loss in generals not counting privates.

The battle began very early before Surise, and may give the reader reason to understand full y, that the assault upon numerous left the second time tere open a yawing gap in the centre of the line into which Shoemannius whole battle line with frightful cells poured and were harled upon the right and left rear but even at such a time failed to dislodge or not tree that great but even at such a time failed to dislodge on the fight and were met by ough a ferriffe min of first from shells, and from the fiftes of the defensive lines, that if the sities of sade and Comourah had been destroyed right there it wouldn't have seemed so how ble. The defenders overthere Stoemannias left grand division, drove them across the Children's immense Playground with great loss, and the windle battle field went up as if the smoke of a huge conflagration.

The THE UNUSUAL FECO FD.

THER is much of the description of the caractrophe as might be expected from war correspondents and nows paper men in both armies who we re unfamiliar with such dreadful scenes and were apt to leave out more than should have been, and did not tell it all not half of it. Yet the account clearly indicated the nature of the frightful battle. In the case in justion when Jesiphines army was held forth upon the christian line and almost won its point just at the moment he was wounded shows the fury of a Glandelinian charge when well started. General Abraham Lot' on the christian side expulsed him with great loss including the espisode of annihilating a portion of his gread army and turning Jesiphies whole division into a rout as recently noticed by Clancy, for this disaster too occurred in a larger scale than he had forseen. If general Jesiphies army had halted to hally during the thrilling scene, it might have been overtaken by a carastrophy from which Clancy could never had embble to help it recover from in this case his efforts of rallying, and of harling reinforcements was a timely interpret in intervention.

The gathering knowledge of this battle disaster has not only confined to the account of rempaper more and war correspondents. For Emeson and even Ennley and Clarcy preserved a record of the battle, and the writing of Abblearmian and clandelinian historians was also made in which one of them told that the battle resing long Lebhances lines caused the greatest loss of life, and that a portion of the stream formed a sort of pool of great extent because of a portion of it being damed up by an explosion. In the eyes of the people throughout Calvernia and those unfimiliar with the occurances of such exceedingly violent battles it is natural that such an event should be regarded as a blunder of either Clandy or Eunson himself, for noither government at that time desired or expected a battle of such extreme bloody fury, but let the readers indered that it was the result of Shoemania plan being that as the name of his fooligh effort at Osmondonson, when he attempted to carry in vain the Ava Waria Weights, and therefore was the results of his own blunder, and no one also was to blums.

Of general Handons confer that of general Meldonia B icknells was the best of the disivious and the most supported by artillery. The center was also strong in reserves of the time of the great disaster along the left wing, there is reason to believe that all of his division, with meneral Woods Mith Corps, with artillery, and cavarly, was sent forth to support the chartened left. Thus the Glandelinian anwise surdenly annuated in their headleng onnesh were at first driven from all the ground they had wen at such a heavy sacrifice by an impetuous wave of christian through counter charging under a terrific curtain of artillary five, and then Jesipines army etill pushing forward as impetuously met its disaster, with the loss of its londer, to fall into confusion and be almost routed, before Clarcy did no desporately rally it.

whon after the frightil battle the refuses and non-combatants of the miracil ous appred city of Lebanon came towaze upin its effects they found the aspect of the country wherein the battle was foughts strangely altered as if a terrific hurricane or formade had presed through. At the beginning of the frightful battle general giddine army had an vanished beforthe christian fire, and as the battle had progressed a vast sheet of smove hiding the whole scene at times, yet through the cover of this the enemy had pushed on, but beyond the Ste larie the assaultbhad been stopped, and not only never had been able to progress further, but the east wing of the storming line had been compelled to retire tward St. Boniface's Crossroads, and researal Fed Davie's division had ceased to exist. So thic trust te mode of buttle at times, added by fires that we could see here and there only small patches of the attracting lines.

It was indeed singular that in Calverinia near the scene of the Abbieann flood and explosion disaster wouldrage such a mighty catastrophe. This battle was said to have raged over awast tract of country, and general Michael Greece was in command of the christian left of the conter, Seneral Minor was in command of the centre, and general Thrace was in charge of the right and also of those concentrated along the Vantura Stream. At the time of the gigantic forging should of the christian wave of assault, a small grove seperated the main Glandelinian army. from a well needed supporting battery of artillery. The shock attack broke through this opening also and poured in fury o upon the surprised and terriffed Glande lin lane such a horror and slaughter being produced ame among the Glande lin lane that all the Glandelin lane of celling general Greece were captured or annihilated with the exception of general Hanson Michaels Brigade which escaped through a lane. During all this desperate conflict there came an explosion that convulsed the ground like an earthquake, and caused such confusion as to enable the Angelinians to pour on unchecked, and in one hours time captured all the landelinians under general Turben and another section at the same time engulfed the army under general Atlistis, which gave may in frightful manic and disorder their general being wounded unto douth. General Phrygian was wounded in trying to really his men. Then the fierce christian troops had pressed on and the whole division of general Attica was surrounded and fought to the last man. At the same time along the christian right, an explosion of munition stores occured which bursted a leves and resulted in a flood that drowned a whole regiment of soldiers caught in the torrent. The christian as mult here overwhelmed the whole of general Deucalion Kings, army and the Minth D ivision of general Pyrrha's, a number of the mon escaping through a glen only to be forced to surrender afterwards. Here indeed was a violent one lawint which in a series of "STOHIS" extended throughout the whole country east of Lebanon, the principal injury being to general Peloponnesus division, and the Glandelinian brigades under generals Bura Bruin, and Helice Juan were found to have disappeared. General fielice's Brigade was engulded in the christian surge and destroyed, as every one fought to the last ... In the battles probably record of onslaughts there was none more destructive than that which wrecled onsanghts there was none most contractive that that which we determine the whole clandelinian left wing under general anticoh. This wing of the Glandelinian army and which ran ed as one of the greatest fighting armies of the age was especially subjected to onslaughts terrible to behold.

The first on slaught on record was of no success and the christians recoiled. The assaults however came on severe and frequent in that locality.

One of there among its caused so much damage to the front line of the defence that general Calign's sen t four of his staff to observe the state of the army. While the dauge was being related and reinforcements brought op another frightf all assault followed. To act as a preventive of any more disasters following, general habenins placed a long teoming line of artiller gathling cum in a position as to cross fire the assailants, but his effort to stay the "Storm" proved vain, for the next one laught overthrew, the center of the Glandelinian army, and caused the capture of all the artillery, The most severe of these earlier one laughts was the fourth. At the time of its occurance the resition had been strengthened, general Trigian had brought up more troops, and was concentrating to support general Parthians. Great destruction to many brigades and terrible loss of life succeeded, the line was shattered but fortunately held, and the two generals were neverely wounded, even at the time the christians were harled back with their lines margled and the dirg... The greatest of the one laughts that white this portion of the Clandelinian army and the most destructive to human life of any on record for that frightful morning, was that of general general Buster Prowns fierce onslaught upon the left grand division of the onomys loft. Two divisions of this wing was entirely destroyed and the loss of life ernormous it being estimated at 1,250,000 soldiers of the enemy alone. Resistance was as tenacious as the fury of hell and all its legions and on the last named occassion the presence of a desperate dogged langaboo army added to the loss, and the losses of generals greatly swelled the sum of the dead. The assault drove all before it for a while untill general Clancy stopped it by one of his divisions sent there on the proper time. In naming other desperate assaults upon the left wing of the foe we must the partly restored c Glandelinian army was again assaulted and severely shalon five hindred thousand on both sides dying in that terrific strife. This also was repulsed but half an hour again came another assault, which was only a petty one, followed by a frightful one attended by a terrible loss of life and victorious, rolling up the clandelinian army for three miles, and forcing it in the shelter of new positions where the men resisted as fiercely as cornered demons.

All those dreadful disasters of the battle together with others due to explosions and conflagrations proved fatal to many a Glandelinian commander many of whom were wounded and whose divisions and brigades because of this passed under the hands of other officers who in their own run also fell , general Percainia and Sac Saracar in also being seriously wounded, and ceneral Persainia's division was so seriously were ed that it never

Of course by his plan general Hanson cent reinforcements, but his own center during his own assault had been rent into fragments by the enemys artillery fire, and the line of battle on his side couldn't progress at first, another right wing of general Hansons army which before had been quite well on the advance became afterwards in a situation that made it possible for it to fall to the rear, the force and fury of the enemys county attacks at the same time having increased, and portions of the contributant lines were displaced. The center too subsided from its movements, But it was along the center and left itself that the most terrible doseltion was wrought by the Clandelinian artillery fire, complication of awful disasters having followed by the terrific Gamelinian, one lately more especially a firstee conflegiation, and the woods set by other more especially a force conflegiation, and we would be assault of general cultumins Shoemanria, and Joseiphie Jensen upon the christian left was immense beyond words. Of still more thrilling and hirrhorrible hterest, was the case of the "Clandelinian Marchionego-Spattara Mangaboo division, laving been driven out of its position during one counter christian changes, it was reinforced by a Corps of Ecoedliers, who being forced to bear the full brunt of the christian storm wave also had no retreat. They reached a woods along what is called Sprockles Brooklere they remayed to recover their formation and were rallies, other trought and their aid and they resisted the Christian advance most desgedly. Securing advantage of a rement when a portion of the assaulting christian line was too much occupied to notice what was goi going on along the center, general apples Dumplings division of troops moved forward to storm the assaulants in the rear. The general made the back, the direction of the division of troops were assauled on all sides and apple numpling (maybe he was good to eat) was forced to order a retreat. The troops fled from field to field persued by the enunged angelinian troops, and reached the streng found that the well needed irridges had been blown up cutting off all further retreat in that direction. They were then almost surrounded, and this division then from sheet desperation, fought so ten tenaciously and desperately, that handicapped at it was it came out gloriously with colours flying, and their assaulants either annihilated or su captured and the survivors sent flying for dear life. THEFRIGHTFUL FURYOF THE BATTLE AND I TS SURPASSING HORFORS . " THE HARVEST OF THE CANNON FIRE. THE PANIC FLIGHT OF A DEVASTATED CLANDELINIAN DIVISIONS ... ". ". ". ".

DURING the lull in the great battle of Lebanon which occured at about Two in the afternoon, general Clancy and all his generals hoped for the best, that the christian armies would aban en abandon the battle and give way. Cla noy's army was in no position to renew the offensive, now he must remain on the defensive. It was so quiet now, that it appeared to Clancy and all his generals that the battle was totally over, and that it would either be general Hansons army that would retreat by night falls or that lancy must one or the other. Yet disaster impended, dire deadly, terrible disaster, for general Hansone armies were gathering for the final offort all the egines of destruction were being pushed forward, and to the old disasters of the battle a new one of unprecede nea herror was about to be added. Of course Clancy a was an Irish man, but Hanson had the Irish way of fighting too Clarcy a new one of imprecede new nerver was about to be added. Of course Clarcy a was an Irish man, but Hanson had the Irish way of fighting too even though he was an Abbicannian. Certainly a little over an hour of blessed silence followed the mornings awful uprear of the battle, and the recently shattered Clandolinian divisions were preparing for reunion with the others, aangorously exposed positions were being abandoned, and the whole recently shattered Glandelinian divisions were preparing for reunion with the others, dazgerously exposed positions were being abandened, and the whole bush of general Glancy's generals prepared to ta e up again the hoped for conward movement should general Handels army retreat.

Clarty nainever heard the well /mown saying, even which Hanley had himself invented with much bitterne as many a time" "General Handely had himself invented with much bitterne as many a time" "General Handely had himself invented with much bitterne as many a time" "General Handely had himself invented with much bitterne as many a time" "General Handely had himself is not a retreating Christian. Why he can't retreat. General know how."

Alas for he and his generals, and for all the other commanders under Clancy, Hansen was only preparing to throw all precautions to the winds and throw his whole army upon him. The hour passed, three fitteen came and ressed into the minutes and so quiet it was that the whole clandelinian and christian armice seemed buries in day time slumber. Canden by without a moments warning the christian cannons all along the whole lime opened into a terrible thundering discharge, and upon the Glandelinian left, a terrific one laught by almost overwhelming numbers was hurled, and divisions of troops were rolled up, many reglemms were compelled to retreat not able withstan to withstand the violent assault, regiments failing back in confusion carried others away with them alike to confusion and retreat amid the red ruin, and sefore half an hour p had ressed away a good section of the enemys left wing had become terribly mixed up and confusion. On fused. A scene of universal horror succeeded or followed the sagen frightful and interpeted catastrophe. So horrible was the conflict now that has momented in the thousands of Glandelinian soldiers by acad or wounded, mest fortunite among the faller who went to suiden death and enceled the pollonged for their wounds, or those who while unhurt were selzed amidst the conflaction the numbers of confused retreating somiors who managed to gain the shelter of St Boniface's Rum clamboring over piles of earth debris, many of them bloading from painful wounds most of them now so terror stricken as the christians pressed on after them as to forget their hurts to forget all but the insticts of flight, while shells crashed and ocmm boomed about them hurling dangerous missles and clouds of debris in all directions.

hurling dangerous missles and clouds of debris in all directions.

Screams of horror, terrific storms of blam blasphemous cries madens mouns of anguish filled the air amid the uproar and crash of battle drowned frequently by the rearing thunder of high explosive shells, and the yells of the persures. And upon it all came a sunden torrential compour of water from the stream when a high explosive blew up in the river and hurled clouds of water upon the fugltives sociting the survivors and adding to the grewness aspect of the frightful situation.

The sufferings of the wounded were awful to comtemplate for both sides.

Seas of bodies were afterwards found, buried and hurned which bore testimony Seas of bodies were afterwards found, buried and burned which bore testimon of the testures from the wounds endured before death relieved their suffer ings. Thousands of these soldiers had died biting at their arms andhands evidently insane from pain and fright. The left wing of the enemy was torn to pieces and forced into a disorderly retreat. The stories related by the survivors of both sides in the army hospitals all reflected the horror of the Lebanon battle that afternoon. There were many mirroulous escapes of officers and generals but the cases of wounded and dying among officers were without number on both sides.

Colonel obbler immediately at the first portion of the onelaught tried to retain the formition of his line and rushed batteries across a road. The furly of the battle seemed to be raging all around them. His line was thinned badly and hear ing grooms from a pite of earth debris hurled by a shell

The of chilstians continued on and he was colliged to live up across the stream. There were only six thousand survivors and they surrencered.

It is the purpose of this aurther to form a faithful record of the concluding section of the story of the awful hours of battle and its ruinous effects when for the wounded minutes out in that dreadful field seemed years, and to preserve an accurate xironicle of its events.

Other frightful catactvalus of the battle has to be seen and even before noon that arivet. The terrific ons aught of them, Shoemannias army which crushed the greater part os Jonein Bens christian army, and in a half hour destroyed upward of two hundred and fifty thousand soldiers, the convulsion of battle which rent the christian right wing asunder, and powred over the christian positions a tidal wave of Glandelinian troops in which three hundred and thirty six thousand lost their lives in the horrible conflict that ensued, the huntrage of artillary fire, which overwhelmed twice the a min christian

Hot one general was safe in this terrible battle. It seemed worse than the convus convulsion of nature. In view of all this,, it has been desued dasirable probably by the enemy to make this work of battle a history of disauters of any sort of charact what are the war had progressed no convulsion or storms of nature had made a record of horror as this war had done, to recount the theories of the great explosion calmittee, floods, fires and so forth, to describe the configurations among the forests, and all the other minor outbrea/s, of the wars droadful.

The Clandelinian center was tremendously atrongly defended. The troops of the rear lineswere behind a given force, and another was beaind a high wall of rubble and dirt a mixture of stones and earth-of emromous thickness. Six feet of this material to defend your position was nothing unusual. The Clandelinian troops were strong in number, and well supported by artillery. The forces which the christian generals brought to bear upon by attracts, and folders behind these constructions show in the result that had the center and left been in these constructions, then the christian waves of assailants might as well have made the assault against a position too impg impregnable to be carried. This later explained why here the foe held the positions and the christian losses were so ernormous. Some of the attacking columns angered avagered four or five men deep, and the "scrape

Another peculiarity was the following. Ohristian one lauints has usually some general direction, to issue straight from their positions. Not so this terrible attack. The assault seemed to come from three directions, and the Clandelinian columns refusing to give way was astonishing. It was newwer the christian cannon fire that was most destructive. During the assault upon general Catania's division, the christians captured five hundred regiments of plandellinians, and did large to the main line. Along general Messinia's line a corps of troops stationed in position to the north of the Ste Mayle was heard of no more. This was the first to the north of the Ste Mayle was heard of no more. This was the first intimation to any of the glandelinian generals that anything serious had happened. General pushants twoop of Infuntry belonging to the 144th, was thrown cut of its resitten but annihilated six one laughts before it was rolled up ther divisions of troops were as well of as if they had been ships that had foundered. General Campo ganto's division had collasped and a portion had survendered. General Pulco himself of the enemy had the following experience. He had thrown his twoops forward to the support of Shoemannias's line of battle early that afternoon, and was moving his troops across Little Sumbean Woods. He suddenly became aware as he moved on, by a terrible sound he hand that the glandelinian army he moving his troops across Little Sumbean Woods he suddenly became waves as he moved on, by a terrible sound he heard that the glandelinian avery he was marching to support must be terribly agituted. The next moment a great assault fell upon his division in that wood, and he was driven out. He believed it was peculiar but he finally repulsed his assailants with great loss recovered the woods is after a horrible fight from trees to tree s in Indian fashion and believed he had gained the duy. Then his Division of troops was assailed on two sides by a hudge line of christian soldiers and hur led out of the woods once more only to regain the woods a second time, where they again appeared to be assailed by the legions of christian troops. The conflict was a score thousand times worse true the battle of the Wilderness in the cival War. Host of his officers were dead or wounded. His division was coally demolished but it worsted its assailants. The general though wounded was still in command. Yet the division though it awaited another attack, and still could hold its own was not now able to advance. He sent a messenger for reinforcements but he was advised to fall back which he reluctantly did.

fierce was the contest as general Clancy send big forces to retrive the disaster that the battle threatened to commit a wor of ruin and do vastation upon nature itself.

Though the christian ar mies rushed on the glandslinian pos positions with the fury of fier e fierce tidal waves, and torrential rains of shell fire and explosives deluged the whole territory, the christian onslaughts are the ficroest and the oursahing troops made their way through the region of Ste Marie in many places, with the dire effect that numbers of regiments still trying to desperately stand their ground lither perished or were surrounded and forced to surrender....

with one some of the best of the landelinian batteries capturedd, and half the Glandelinian wings in dreadful confusion and panic, and suffering the Glandelinian wings in dreadful confusion and panic, and suffering immeasureable losses no efforts could stay the christian advance, while over the plains and across the fields to the west of Ste Marls new centres of bloody fights began adding scores of small battles to the general battle. In soldiers who had rallied reopened fire, and the generals belief to check the sweeping christian advance, but handicapped as they were by the lack of the proper batteries of artillery, and by explosions of shells, the opposing to the christian advance proved a most difficultate, that and could not be accomplished. The Glandellinian cavarily lent their aid in this desparae effort, but the christians continued to press on, and the torrential rains of shells nurled by christian batteries helped in this advance and prevented the Sandellinian armise which had helped in this advance and prevented the Chandelinian armies with had been so terribly beaten to even rully, a general Epro Dro's division of fresh troops moved through the region of Straits kur tard Callaren's Playground, they encounted many scenes of norror and angulen, and the frightful fury of the battle was unaccountable

As the heavy fore of smoke so thed down upon the battle field, the christian advance that seemed to be fast destroying what remained of the foremost chandelinian divisions was hardly visible a new noise gave evidence that reinforcemon a was trying to stop their progress. There were numbered of pitched battles, a thousand times bloodier than the whole American civil war combined into that short time, and it seemed as if the christian armies were going to unintain the upper hand for good. But it was not so. Jeneral Clancy had seem all that was going on, and had nurriedly during all trat time massed his own troops and reserves forward, and managed to close the gaps made by his own troops and reserves forward, and managed to close the gape made by these dispeters, and while the retreating troops was being escorted to the rear and other places to be rallied, new lines of battle were being formed beyond the Lebanon junction and the christians began to mot with the most dogged resistance ever seen in the war. It was necessary for Clancy to use all his reinforcing batteries as there were no other means to deal effectively with the advancing christian forces. Several hous passed before the reign of disorder could be cho checked it being finally accomplished by the efforts of general Snowmannia and Emery Page also whose own divisions did not give way. Here is the story of the efforts he had

Must especially pe pre-occupied him was the successions of terrific What supecially pe pre-occupied him was the successions of terrific scattered encounters since the first hour of the disaster, in which over nine hundred thousand lives had been lost per encounter on both sides combined not counting the mnin general action. Hundreds of thousands of exultant christian runs sof troops had pured into the Glandelinian territories pushing on as if no resistance were met with Many signs of total disaster to the colandelinian army had been discovered by officers swerywhere during the moments of general fright and disorder. Constal Messinia was wounded and it took the covering fire of artillery to enable them to retain their position. During the frightful confusion a large gru group of Angelinian sold diers fired at three of general Shospmanias staff wouting one seriously. Shospmania narrowly escaped being hit/

Soldlers fired at three of general Bhospannias staff wouning one seriously. Shoeman in marrowly scorped being into the stage of such an uproar which advance the christian generals intended to maintain most vig rlougly, the Glandslinian generals intended to maintain most vig rlougly, the Glandslinian generals officers who would dare fall back from their positions with out orders, and that all the harshest methods and all the severity of the military regimine would be invo ed against those who would retreat or order retreat without recleving permission. The christians were advancing with a fury and vegat vigor that would make the demons and angels jealious, and in order to try and stop such a crashing onelught, general Cland's programms was to allow no one of the reinforcing line in officers to retreat without recieving his special orders to do so or unless it was absolutely necessary and to all the supports he would give an secort or an addition of immense bodies of Glandelinian cavarly and artillery to guard against any danger of the wildly advancing christians from advancing round the right or left flank. The retreating columns were secorted by strong bodies of Gargoy line averything was being done to obstruct the advances of the christian troops. The artillory fire tore vast avenues in their advancing lines, grape and camber added to the first like a flood of train mowing the christian troops. The artillory fire tore vast avenues in their advancing these grape and camber added to the first like a flood of train mowing the christian stoys in whole lines as fast as they came on their persons and surviving officers and generals were instructed and traily.

It was how an awful buttlee, terrible beyond extreme but despite all efforts the christian waves in places continued their advance defying the most terrific fire of the cure with their eagerness for gain, and in some instances returning a storming fire of their own, and even after the christian such a time and wance, when along made in an army, the Chandelinia christian onslaught had been apparently huried bac on confision and with and such a titanic christian advance. When ale mg most parts the christian ons kught had been apparently hurled bac on confision and great loss, they would be lying latent within shelters of the battlefield continuing such a rifle fire that it would maye been sucide for the greatest columns of alandelinian troops to advance, and reinforced and supported by their own artillery which had been moved forward, they broke again from cover with the wildest hurticane uproar of yells in a furious charget that again assumed formidable proportions before it could be checked. In resisting this charge, general Emery Oage was wounded, and general Januarius was shot dead. The main force of this assault started near St Boni face villiage and between the Crossroads and during that time du for an hour or so spread along the whole line and drove the Giandelinians across a large area, the advancing ciristians as ing their way to the Crossroads, and sweeping all before them in lauching across Calkiren's Payground and threatening general Shoemannia's left flank. General Emp Emercy Pays had to give way temporary as he was assailed on three sides and all this added to the horror of the carnage, A large section of his position was captured during the progress of the "storm" the lack of amount of the across very dangerous. General Page was reinforced by general Shoeman man himself and he therefore held in his position. General continuing the relation of the troops were dangerous. General Page was reinforced by a squad of christials soldiers while trying to raily his retreating troops. Despite the raily of the Glandelinian left wing, an error or normous gap remained the reserves that Jancy had if these couldn't stop the christians to the christians and the christians advance them all hope was gone But it did, axaa in and again the christians and olg divisions of troops were nursed forward to first it, the aget of the reserves that clancy had. If these couldn't stop the christian advance then all hope was gone. But it did, . Again and again the christians tried to get through that teritory and again and again they were shot down in many imm ense droves, and were finally forced to fight on the

As far me one could see at sections where the fary of the battle ind a falled could be seen many of the fallen. Sometimes were dozens of windrows of dead and wounded, there fifty windrows, further on perhaps a hundred and within the abandored christian positions now lest to the enemy swarch of their dead. The glandelin ians had now lost all the ground they had won to recover that now was impossible, and all that could be hoped for was that the shattered lines of troops could reach their own positions before the christians would redouble their own efforts to push on and try and carry those. The large camps of wounded were sometimes however in the way for retreating troops. General Piazza, 's division in retreating tward its own position crowded many tents with its own quots of wounded, all the soldiers were now chall in any which were once uniforms, nany of them new Officers and privates were mingled in nortaion and one could not tell who in the could might be a claudelin in reneral or a private.

We observed the battle in a distance and at first thought the enemy ago being successful at some section. We saw some general fall after he had tried to rally a division, and assisted in the reforming eighty six regiments, all of them under heavy fire. The faces of every one of the fallen showed the suffering from their wounds, itany and their arms or legs ripp ed or torn away by shell fire. I'm a fraid it will be a long time before my herve will ever tecover from the atroclose impressions to which they were subjected, and my eyes will retain as t long as they remain open the vision of novriols battle, death and devantation, which oppressed them. To witnesse thechattle along the christian left no ever we proceeded as far as Palmii Creef on horse, and thence afoot. Bix or seven girlacouts of the foe side accompanied us to Vantu a kiver, and I and my staters had decided to reach the scene of table at the tever the cost. Two or three Glandelinian officers, cut off from one of the regiments while on duty by the tattle, were returning to find news of the fate of general Bybys's brigade. They preceded me on norms. We . we went in squad formation through an orchard of a farm, holding hands and stundling over debris whole regiments of landelinians were coming q n on a sort of withdrawel and many of them were wounded and covered with manager, having all sorts of dreadful painful wounds. Many of them were crupi ed by the rary of the christian resistance. Some distance along we came upon a division of fresh troops preparing to advance. In reply to our questions as to that had happened along the cristian christian left wing, they hade vague and accounte gestures, and continued to gaze at us as if they were stalled cows. After two hours murch we saw the main of the

Some sections of the christian left had seemed to been disolved away but we hoped the main christian army was same. One of the Glandelinian benerals who saw a brigade on a slow withdrawel was giving orders for an installation of a wireless e.e telegraph wire in a tree. I saw with the aid of up glasses agny disordered regiments of cavistians far before the advance of the Glandelinland proving that every section of the christian line there tas in vuin for that time. Yet seated on a stump was a wounded plandelin lan officer who swore at us and said we were fouls to go so close to cauthe field. The region beyond where we were age impractionals. Ecnorates portions of the christian left had receiled we found that out, cut other sections continued to obstruct the davance of the foe. We were standing in sand o. often up to our walsts in water watching the battle fo getting in our excisement where we were be decided to climb a high rise of ground and advance across the va m ravines of crushwood to see the battle closer if possible. It seemed we marched more with out orains than with our negs, for apparently about we shraphell sometimes rained in a "deluce" and yet we were not injused non scared. One of the girlscouts aropped behind ready to arop from fright. At eleven in the morning we reached the stream of Ste Marie, and heard that of Colonel purners r legiment of fifteen hundred men only seven remained, and they were wounded and in improvised tents. I should have felt sorry, but how can any one when they have seen Tendum have lett setty, our in can any one what the enemy has done in the wark Some of them asked us pitifully for bread, but we ourselves had at eaten since we started, and we did not know what to answer, so we were forced to leave them hopeless. We had however only covered two miles every step at the cost of the Greatest exertions and in the fave of dreadful perils. Our uniforms were suaked with water and sweat. Finally we decided to rest but rest was impossible. We could see through our field glasses that the whole christian left wing except to the west apparently was completely blotted outlarge divisions of troops 128wers still sand standing their ground, but other portions of the battle line had collasped, and it seemed as if the enemy was carrying all bfore before them. While on the hill we were in a sort of hollow in a wood and to that fact for our first experience experience we owe our lives. In our locality all was a quiet. End we gone a little more forward we doubtless would have been alled or badly wounded. There were twenty one or more men a little in gavance of us also watching the battle and they appeared to be officers. All of a suiden the whole hillside before us seemed to rise into the air like a huge rolling cloud, the fragments falling among the trees of the forest as if in a shower. A deafering rear as of the loudent thanker shook us all off ou feet and filled out ears with an earsplitting notice. The air becaus suffoctant likes out ears with an earsplitting notice. The air becaus suffoctating this uset and some some less by body seemed to grow numb at once. I don't now how long tay in a sort of stager before I realized that there was a lot of debrie all over the unit was sister were frantically algoing me out. They told me what happened. A christian gumer had seen the group of officers and let loose a high a orbitizing gamen has seen to be grouped to the state and a seen thought the end of the world had come, and that I was not yet dead nor my sisters, but that every one clacking perioded. I could not at first vecognize what , saw as landscapes, of a partie line far away, of fices, or of my sisters digging me free. Still the earth trembled from curcies concumsions of explosions, and drum drum artillery fire, and gusts of te "This explosions came in termittently, and the concussion toppled over some trees. I after being it tilted to me my feet glanned but where we had seen the mighty "eruption". All the trees there had been shartered to mere nothing. I looked for the other will standing section of the curie tian left wing. It had coll asped, the troops verreating, the enemy cruening the whole line of it to pieces. As I realized that I was stilll alive and my sisters too, I thought of that could have happened, and believed if the same guin or saw us too he'd let go again and we sure knew christian graners only miss an object when they intend to do so and not before. He find aimed directly at that spot and did not miss. So we rushed buck to where we had come from before reaching the hill, although from other sounds it seemed to us as if many other actions of the battle in seperate sections had started in all directions and their was a wild confusion of sounds. We saw as we did so the "skeleton of a christian division recoiling. The air was full of smoke and dust, It was at times as if we brouped inrough a fog. Yet I could see at some distance away what appeared to be a great wift torn in the bround by some might, explorions, and at the time of the outburst the scene there must have been as if an elongated "bleam to eruption had com memoed...3.3 Theny of the stragging or others. The classical interest seemed to be acting as if they were a lot of addition, gome were clambering over the ravine with their uniforms in tare tatters. I saw a shell hit a five story farm house as we went on and it was reduced to only a heap of stone, twisted ironand wood splinters. The five stories had been b lown down into a heap of twin about firteen or sixtee. Yes this hits sure showed the dreadful power of those shells. without believing how impossible was the effort we began to press on. In some parts of the ruins we could hear mound, and therefore we doubted not a number of landslinkan soldiers had been in that oulding when the gang-gang shell hit it. I would som stimes believe I heard some one shees cry, and indeed it sometimes sounded as if we were in a world of so called ghosts and still being namans. I and my friends and sisters were still continuing on, when some Scoo ldier Scoodlier soldiers came and not recognizing a sixed if we wanted something to eat. 2.2. Untill then I did not realize how hangry I was, and protably my sisters did not either, alt al though we had gone nearly wenty four nours viciout a bite of bread, I. They told me it was too dangerous for girlscouts to go near a battle field and that we would go crazy if we stayed in such a region any longer and timt the "christian dogs" as they called as would capture us. These Scoodlier landelintans are strange soluters all right. They're ind to everybody of their own side, and not knowing us were even very ind to us. They really did more than other landelinians would for their follow, min. They told us there were on a hadred and eighty thousand men in the B Brigade to which they belo belonded, and only about one handred or so had survie surviviel. For the hours we undered about the region will! I thought the signts of the criminal buttle and death and destr destruction all around us would are ve as chaz, On the hour of ten when it meaned as if the christian left which were build reinforced and granted to reverse the battle about two hundred of the survivors general Hedua's division of five a madreauthousand Omerians went to the rear gone of the soldlers were so hearly no ed from the concussions of shellll explosions that they were wrapped in blankets. One prominent general of the almost annihilated division one had been ariven half insune by seeing his son shot down in the battle and mortaily wounded followed the savivors clad in a army shall, ... dany of the others coming to the rear were so wousness that it was besteved they would alle before the day was passed. I and myself were so sagmened by the sight that we disn't follow. We n ew the same scenes would be observed on the christian side. Wille watching the dreadful scene I met a well dressed dlandelinian officer and ag followers wan ted to be shot out of the ar zone, and as ed whether I and ag followers wan ted to be shot by the "energy" or catthred.

As we nearest the region where seneral servanish a tanachinan livision was moving foregra to the supp ort of the assault uponthe christian left, a superior general sade his may forward on norseback and called repeatedly, , , , for his troops too to follow him one are. Then from some part of the maiting kine of troops (boopdess p) came the voice of come other officer ... "I am here.I am here. then do we go formard.?"

"Are all the officers there?"

"Are all the officers there!"

"Yes we are all here."

"Yes we are all here."

"You wand, "and they all mirched away many I am sure herer to return as he saw so much firling in the direction of the christian lines that everything has obscured from view by the fog of smoke. Then general genaphin's division started to move formate also, we saw elsewhere lots of workeded sitting in great numbers or being down but in isolated groups... Physically also they were utterly exhausted, and seemed scarcely conscious of their surroundings. Two men were carrying a wounded officer on a stretcher. His head was covered with blood and a bloody bandage.

I'ls that Colonel Mic-Hollester we heard some one demand.
"No "one of the men replied. "It's general gurran. We found him near the captured christian trenches. We are carrying him to the rear. It's simply awful over there. Everybody is falling. Those christian dogs are mowing us all down."

Z"We saw one officer his uniform tattered and torn. He had his arm in Z'we saw one officer his uniform tattered and tornine indu his arm in a sling. To us it seemed as is over half the army was wounded. There surely was not a single happy thing wat; in within the plancellnian armies nor its, cames. See then went forth congreing anything and were aroused by a treemen doug a roaring nound. At that amount as we were stanking near a sort of slope I felt myself falling, and thought I was in the grip of some unseen monster. It indeed seemed to us as if we have for the time being whether we had sinted or not been placed within the confinces of helf for and the roar of battle the air was filled with a "hurticane" of most terrifying available. We some was a came of on the real tation however that some new antieks we noon again came o to the rall ation however that the new appening must be a reversal in the nuce aram performing beforeous. The christian left wing was rallied and was either advancing or opening fire of artillery in new sections. A shell screened above us and exploded among the tree tops and a big anch and a part of the upper b trunk fell among the branches of lower treeses below. These objects knused a moment and then chashed down ard, the other branches giving way at once and almost fell you as before wedeven had time to even think of ruening from under.... We also witness ed the work of trying to restore lines that were being roken and torn up by the first rally of the christian left sing. That was an awful stubborn conflict .. As the christian waves were said to have been starting to advance some section of the Glandelinian army must have felt the brunt of it, and the scene weckithessed was well worth with state withessing. Amid a great confusion of sound we heard a faint o cry of; "hally, hally give the christian dogs all the fight you want" coming from some distance. I and my sistors watched the scene through the field glasses and the soldiers attempting to continue the advance against the christians were fighting as an army of demons in delirum, they strove desperately for the nouns, and finally to a through a portion of the advancing christian lines. I'll bet the christians themselves were so example and that they must have have the foolish Alancelinians a terrible lose. But we sawcthe daring thrust of these ware devil Clandelinians and cut as under a part of the christian fronts. Seeing their advantage we no could suspected that at any rate the landelinians must have fell to work with greater vigor, and presently we observed that they began to prese on still further. We didn't believe that portion of the christian line would ever recover but we saw far to their rear a new purple or red line approaching and heard the noise of fresh cannons. Violet tried with her c.tddidtddinkthtttt caming to photograph the scene of the battle and from some unseen upot a fragment of a shell nit it and flung it so far from her that she could never recover it, and she told me before you came that she felt the shock to her hands yet. Yet no matter how hard they were pressed all of the now her hands yet. Yet no matter how hard they were pressed all of the now shattered Glandelinian columns seemed capable of resisting the counter christian advance in the most so elementary manner. The following incident of which I and my sisters observed is a good example of this condition. I got one officer the was woulded released from the debris of a cannon in the confident of feering up one of them shouted for the Love of Reptune help us get out of this buttle inferno. We are wounded and cannot move."
"That's eary enough! "I replied now of cavenstically. "Go again to the rear and jos firl fina sagens there."

"Now can be in our connect concretor get there!" was the neet question.
"On your two light answers, "Bo you win kews are able to carry you han.

much longer. He began to fear he was failing entirely in his attempts to save the Glandelinian army from a disasterous defat. There were too plenty of glandelinian generals willing to risk an immediate counter charge upon any section of the christian line with such a reputation as Hansons army had got as a terrific fighter, but their main generals would not hear army had got so a terrific figurer, but their main generals would not in of its many of them said that general Clancy did not understand when the christian army was already winning. The most promishing of all turned down his proposition for a grand counter charge for another reason. "I know general Annson, within and his methods of fighting well said one of the generals." If have learned of his waysawell. That sasult upon his main left is all nothing out a great big olumder and I d have moved agrinot the christian center had I been in command. "I believe someones statement about that general Hanson vivian being say to subjected was a lie, general Turn apple said clarcy reddening.
The other general was not disturbed. "I understood now you have come to the conclusion that this situation was north paveloping as answered. "I am spected the situation. I got my judgment from General Adele-de-garbe and I am not an army expert. Adele-de-garbe said "He'd like to see the general who can even put it over on general Hanson ..ivian."

General Clancy felt baifled, general rurnapple could not have been move plausible.

"Of course it would be best for me to resign my position as your adviser" continued general garnapple with an intenation of suave irony. "In fac- general U lancy I should have done so long long ago, Does that fact forcid my mentioning that you have acted in an insane manner in trying to lick such a Hepoleon as Hanson by tring trying to retrive the first dieacter this morning.?"

"You declined my advice"The general persued. "You went on anead and did what I adviced against, you left part of the army without support which has standing its ground at St o boniface's Crossroads, and caused the nounding of Jesiphne Jensin ho is one of the best generals of our army, and Adele-Ge-garbe had to assume command, you thrashed a large portion of the christian army of course which at first seemed impossible for you to do but left the left wing pyrecelly unconvaed, and finally couldn't vetain any position there. Further more the almester is spreading and we won't be able to state stand ground at all now. The almester is too far spread. We have no reinforcements coming from any far distance while no armies have arised for Banson from the northeast."

Gelenr General Clancy sulped, all he could think of was the desire to anch his first into general management accelle seemed constantly urged to physical violence, and yet since he came to the country and became a general he had never met a fighter as hanson as.

"You will understand general clancy" continued - murnapple that "That in this army mil rights of generals are respected. You cannot try now and move for and any reserve force with any purpose of counter charge when defensive movements now is our only safty. General browseaus's division is seen moving up from the Unitarene larground plains and they cannot be stopped, his christian togo are ab Herce as pulls. The christian army would craen upon me as kellingtons aid open impossons at Vaterloss. What do you think I I am a foot?"

"Why not be one since you are. "Inquired general Turn apple bluntly. "They won't stand ground much longer anyway. You could avoid further such bloodshed. My the battle is far bloodier than we had ever leber foreven expected. Our tosses are immeasureable. You complain of my suspecting goulds a fool, and your acting one."

2-meral Clancy could not answer to this. He thought of the Ste Marie horror and disaster, and the spreading nottle plague some that swept all off the St Boniface Gresoroass, but he understand that this was not the prin cipil cause of his refuentanor was it pride entirely, and he knew then the cause of his defeat. He felt sure it was because of the Vivian

He felt that even assuming the defensive methods would be of no avail lie was indeed in a miserable condition of suspicion of spies within his camp overthrowing all his pans plans, and wondering where the next blow would fall. He had seen however that all the retreating troops were being withdrawn to the shelter of their own Glandelinian positions. He found too that general Hansons army though the battle

Hany of the more daring Glandelinians began their efforts by saving an officer are five others in the range of shell five boyond comprehension of fury, and who were lying in a trench near St poniface Crossroads.

They aided in extracting many more regiments of terrified soldiers who enclosed in the christian trenches and menanced by the christians on two sides couldn't advance nor retreat. The N inth C orgs and the division of troops under generals Porymann and Salvanoic were equally prompt and efficient, and showed such courage and darig intheir efforts to with draw shattered divisions from the unsafe territory and under fire of infantry and sholls from the christian lines, as to win the highest commendation their praises being on every lip of the Jandelhians, among privates and the off icers alive. These troops in advancing to cover theoretreat of shattered divisions hesis esitated before no danger, recisting christian assaults doggedlyor pressing on through unsafe territorys when ordered to do so by superior officers the had not lest all hope that some landelinian regiment or brigade was still safe, but trapped and couldn't retreat. As wicked as clandelinian armies are, they're requally as brave as the christians are, and almost did win some admiration from even their enemies. The intrepldity of these Glandelinian heroes from any section of the line 1.d them to dare the greatest dangers to rally portions of the army and withdraw the others to their own positions in a ty. One awful incident followed an hour after the great second spaem of the battle. A Brigade of Scoodlier soldiers came to the assistance of a troop of Zimmermannians still in a precarious position and whom had been fiereely assaulted four times in almost eldless endless succession. The left center and the right of this division still remi remained fighing fighting it out desperately but the other sections of it were falling back. On the right however were still clinging to the position two Regiments and a Brigade of troops a little far in advance but cut off from the main body and fiercely attacked on all sides...2.3.3. Their officers had signaled many times for help. There however were no other reinforcements coming and rescue of these and diers seemed impossible, as the assallants were overwhelming in numbers and were led by general Bruno G odfrey and was a portion of general Dare not Lies troop.

The brav e sc Scood liers did a most desperate and heroic thig indeed. While one brigade of them moved far around to, the rear of the assailans While one brigade of them moved far around to the rear of the assalians assaliants even at the danger of being exposed to the long range christian tatterles, and moved against the left of the christian rear, two other brigades with fixed bayonets charged so vigoro vigoriously as to literally drive their forward commudes through the christian wave it as the teeth of a comb through heir. By this one leight the christian wave is the teeth of a comb through heir. By this one leight the christian line was demolished and the Scoodliers cut their way through, and finally reached the besieged troops, while the rest of the Eccodlier force drove the christian line along the other section away from the battlefield with great loss. Then the Besieged troops were freed from their assallants and were able to be withdrawn from their precaurious position. The whole of those troops then assembled in the fields beyond Ste Marie, preparing to retreat tward the main position of their own, and the left of the zimmer mannian c olumn was deployed 'ward the center At that moment a big force of win is Abyssin ilian troops under general Hel Ht Hetler fell upon the whole landelinian column from three sides, and in the dest desperate atruceled that ensued killed and wounded every one of them alike, the Zimmermannians so periously perilously rescued and the brave rescuing troops. Ceneral Vatsons division came up at that moment and despered the dinjersed the Abyssinkilianschut not without great loss and he himself fell wounded ... The work of rescueing a Clandelinian division near the Bt Boniface Crossroad s was bloody and most, pathetic even for the enemy side... The rescue force as it is called, through the most heroic efforts at the cost of 'wholesale and bloody losses had succeded at three in the afternoon in reaching a portion of general Leblances shattered divisions in whose direction from the christian lines came the most fearful bursts of inmeasureable firing of artillery and rifle, indicating that one or more of the strongest christian divisions had been storning the position and that only one or more of the brigades of the glandelinians in that sector were au surviving. This fact infused fresh vigor into the troops sent to aid them, and they closed up and came to their aid and fought most heroically, but although they continued in their most desperate efforts that seemed insenty in such a situation to do so, untill late in the afternoon no success rewarded their efforts and the christians continued afternoon no success rewarded their efforts and the christians continued, to press on as if they didn't meet with no resistance at all....2.2.2.2. The _landelinians withdraw to a ravine of great length and the fight ing was then resumed, when all the glandelinians went to their efforts with a vim feeling certain that general Leblances troop, and four others of his left grand division were still able to be secured from their assailants. Only the fury of the christians was unwonted now, still the rescueing forces, among whom were great numbers of desperate unbeatable Omarians persovered though great numbers fell Sixteen colinels fell in this dreadful fight, seven generals were mortally wounded two dead, and many officers of other rank fell and the losses of the Glandelinians was unspea nble and and a tour fame in the last of a seed, and at four fourteen in the afternoon there we another most violent one laught from the christian troops, which rendered the situation to those who were endeavoring to give soccor succ or to the other divisions extremely dangerour, as the Christian forces threatened momentarily to overwhelm them, one of the brigades forces threatened momentarily to overwhelm them, one of the original collarged to before the force of the ascault, and began to retire. The clandelin has however forgetful of the danger of being rolled up them solves continued their efforts, refusing to be decided the chance of rescue and their persistence with the help of more troops coming up was soon rewarded, for they harled the assallants back all along the line with the loss of many regiments in dead and wounded and were able to come up to the section of Le plances men. The divisions were hadly crushed by the terrific christian angult, and it seemed as if disaster to them had been most instantaneous. Undeterred by this gresome find of disasterous effects the Glandelinian officials continued their efforts untill they were able to hold the assailants at bay and withdraw the torn line of troops out of this precarious position and retreat to the safty of their

Indeed the battle had been terrible beyond words. Everywhere rescueing parties of troops, divisions, bri brigades and whole Corps and other troops aided by covering artillery, and by cavarly had continued unflaggingly at the efforts to restore all sections of the broken wings of the army, their incessant cry" Retain Lebanon" being heard on every i i side asthey advanced everywhere and mot the recoiling troops and by example cheered them to stand and rally and retire in a better order. A command, and they would go vigoriously at it. All those rallied and brought to the position would be then determined to maintain that position. All those withdrawn from the endangered territory were covered with a mantle of earth dust and mud that made them appear as if they were living images in plaster. All this was caused by the terrific force of shell explosions close to the trenches. In "Farmers Dell" protected by two batteries two regiments of Mangaboo Glandelinians had maintained a position all day, and were as possible, though no trace could be found of the main division that as one fortable as possible, though no trace could be found of the main division that was supposed to have been connected with them: Several other regiments who had been withdrawn with their tattered colors at the time when the christian assault was not so pressing were found to have lost three hundred out of five hundred men in dead, and one hundred in wounded... A small Company of general Regulo's divisions had been hugging a position in a small moras the full afternoon and had not been molected by the christian assailants.

Of the Hobbonites in the Glandelinian army, forturately the great majority of them escaped the de disaster, only two Brigades of them under general Worldling and Demas which were driven out of its position near the Consulate Foad. The disaster to them was first discovered by general Stantonia who moved his division from Victoria and reaching the scene found a portion of the Hobbonite division on the recoil. He pushed his division forward, hoping against hope untill convinced against his will that if he intended to retain the Hobbonie division there much longer all would perish, as a big force of christians was fairly collasping upon the ruins of this division. Nothing remained to be done but of ordering the whole line to withdre T, and a force of sixty thousand cavarly were brought up to cover the retreat, which proved difficult and very

At the time general Glonon cars up to aid the force, and succeeded in Staying the advance of the christian forces. Then during the lull preparations were at once made for a hasty withdrawel, covering it with artillery fire. It sure was a sad dire roll of dead at Lebanon. 2.2.2.2. CHAPTER SIX ... ".".

THE SUMMING UP AFTER THE CREAT CATASTROPHIC BATTLE ..

THE neart of general Clancy had been beating responsive at the sights of gthe the disasterole defeats of the Glandelinian armies and so m, had many more of the landelinian generals throughout the whole landelinian army. 2. This was especially the case of the second catastropphe of the battle. when the means of communication between large embattled sections of the Glandelinian army, were so promptly cut off, that even Manley himself lying abed with that nasty cold could not learn of the disasters almost at the moment of their occurance, and no one had been able to deail detail the neve to him in any such vividy that he could almost seemed to have gazed at them as they occur.

The hearts of many of the incative officers and generals beated with the ardent desire to help the crushed did divisions still not able to retreat to the protection of their own trenches, for in these hours of such awful tattle the unversal brotherhood of the Candelinian divisions was almost a thing accomplished, so closely put together were all of the divisions by 'Onds of immediation immediate a association for the cause.

A very recent example of this was in the case of the destructive on-slaight against the Cla delinian position at "Children's Playground and the Ste Marie position, and the dieaster accompanying it, when the generals of the whole of general Adels-De-Gards stood at first half paralyzed in startled horror and sympathy, freeling tward the beaen divisions as though they themselves were the disasteriously defeatee ones, and poured out the greater numbers of their own imactive troops in unstined unstinted profusion for the relief of the defeated forces, but yet so ld could not stop the onward much of the christian forces, e.

These no doubt were divisions of Adeledgarbes own forces lin ed to them solves by the ties of the cause, but in the case of the frightful "volcenic Eruption" of battle along the St Boniface Crossroads where the booming bang Fruption" of battle along the it Poniace Crossrouds where the booming bang of shell, and the crash of christian cann one sounded worse than a hundred thousand most violent of all thunderstorms in one, a few hours later and the destruction of ten kanous Clandelinian divisions resisting a wild charge of the Nationals, the sentiment felt for the victims of this tremendous battle disaster was none the less intense and the lasts to aid them by artillery and heavy bodies of reinforcements none the less immediate, immediate only to swell the battle to a fury of which the Auther which the writer phimself fould not even imagine or concleve. The same showing of civing aid was ganifested in the same disaster avenuing along the enemy writer phimself could not even imagine or concieve. The same showing of giving aid was manifested in the pame disaster extending along the onemy left wing when the whole glandelinian front there was overwhelmed and crushed, y a similar chietian artillety fire and assault of infantry, and the simplify and aid of other landelinian generals and their divisions called for, a fast as men could march or run. As might be expected expected from the these terrible examples the battle assumed a character which no one among thebest of Historians had they even been witnesses of it could describe in the most immense volumesee.e.e. Yet now all the surviving Clandelinian generals who did not fall in the frightful battle a tornado were apprehensive by the dire dicaster, and the suffering of the Clandelinian army, and of the terrible imm seasureable number of the dead and wounded, and offers of aid still came from all portions of the inavt inactive sections of the army gpontaneous aid was sent, and since the disasterhad boon found outs handred divisions of troops, were on the way as fast as men could go. Among the earliest and most prompt to send aid was general Stonemann which entered or who entered upon the work of repalling the christian advance with a spontaneous activity that promished the best results. Every one of the generals were appalled by the dreadful calamity that occured to the Glandelinian army and they offered all the aid was that was possible to be sent. Hany of the hard pressed alandellinian officials event sent appeal upon appeal for more troops and amsunition high during all the time was suddenly and abundantly responded to throughout the whole battle line, as similiar appeals were being respondened to in all to the other sections of the army along the center and the left ... Stricken to reball the advance of the christians to cover the retreat of the shattered, Clandelinian front, a movement to action in a bittle storm mirked by a immeder mable magnitude and displaying a wanimity without parallel in all the battlesthat had gone before in the war .. Coming at a time of profound and universal and terrible war, the army into a saddened discoulaged, disordered mass.... To many of them a vision of Manson was as the "destroying "ungel.....

alandelinian divisions, had brought all other glandelinian columns together in the most terrific battle in the war so far. From every quirter of the clandelinian army divisions of fresh troops had poured forward

The first militaryl response from general AdeledeOarte next chief to Manley came on the time of the first great disaster of the battle, when he sent general Celtic Peltic with with 1,500,000 men for the einforceing of the clandelinian right wing, then recoiling from the mallied christ-ian left and it advanced for that section under orders from the general Stuff to stand ground against the "christian dogs ut all costs. General Sperry in command of this hage division had wired from led River Region that a part of the army could wait until 1 the retreating troops were cared for, but general Adeleg Adeledegrarbe replied anguily to push through immediately that he would tolerate no dulay, and therefore the divisions of troops had pushed for ward but even couldn't stop the christian advanceno matter how hard they tried. Might as well have tried to fristrate the advance of the legions of Heaven isself.
During the main issue to come in the late after noon general adele-deg the

"You His Excellency general Johnston Hunley;

wrote by wireless to Manley;

With all my staff generals, and which in future of all my countrymen I am appalled by the most dreadful glamity which has befallen your whole army in this tattle. I offer all the aid I can to repell the christian advance, which is better than my sic vi sincere sympathy. Many of the generals have issued an appeal for reinforcements and notified me that It will be immediately communicated to the lines of battle hard pressed. I have enough troops to mass thirty million against the victorious christians for the rest of the afternoon. I am forwarding three million a lready, supported by one million five hundred thousand cannon, full army rations and plenty of artillery. The troops can help also to rally the divisions not yet retr reated to their own positions. We have been disasterously repulsed twice, but whether the Nationals will attack our own positions is question to be settled. So far the battle has hilled Freeh artillery is in posisoposition to repell them we ought to be able to hold out in case they do hurl a general storm upon us."

General Francis AdeledegarBe."

General James El 116 was equally prompt, and ardent. He sent forth two of his own grand divisions of very good fighting men. This effort of restoring restoring the shattered glandelinian front was recieved with expressions of very warm feeling from general Minley heemselffe the general saying; Mant most of my surviving generals, Regimental and other commanders have done on this occassion when the condition of the army was very very bad is magnificient and shall not be forgotten..... Our Mational gurds stand first outdistancing all others in their career as fighters whether we win or lose My gratitude and that of the nation is so great that I alone cannot find words in which to express it fittingly. 2"

A 11 this of course was what might be called preliminary. Many of the Glandelinian generals strove for all means in their effort to strengthen the glandelinkan positions themselves. The appalling calamity to the Glands linian army was being followed by fear, distress, and suffering beyond measure among so many countless thousands of badly wounded torn up human bodies. Many of the best of the Chandelinian batteries for supplying the covering and defensive fire was paralyzed, and the Glandelinian army in the whole was in grave danger should general Hanson hurl his whole force forward at this critical time, and therefore and an exceptional emergency exis existed which demanded that the obligations to all surviving generals should regard no retreats now from the positions under any conditions untill a retreat of the whole army was saftly assured. 2.2.2.

The immense columns however still unengaged, the warm and steadfast friendship between all Glandelinian generals, the affection for their own native land, felt by all the soldiers, all this was hoped to prompt the reserves of the glandelinian armies, and the sections now rallied, and the other parts still to be rallied and withdrawn from the danger zone should it was hoped by general Clancy and Hanley to prompt every one to the imm ediate and effective relief of the stattered alandelinian armies. Thus while general Adele-do-rarbe thus sprang actively to thr the aid of the demolished and stricken glandslinian army, the troops or officers of other various columns were similarly engaged. Great divisions of the fresh Glan delinian forces were easer to go forward. Half a million however were only rallied of the shattered divisions, and the numbers to be withdrawn were supposed to te over 10, 000,000, and yet other town and sungled brigades added their quota of smallied disorganized and terrified troops of men witill the total a surplessed twenty millions. Constal Canad's division of 300,000 man had lost 156,889 men in dead and wounded, and other brigades and troops had added generious ly "to the our of hadly disorganized... So it could be seen that the Chindelinian army was in the gravest peril ... 2.2.

The tidings of the two disasterous repulses and defeats defeats of general Manlys army,,, at Letanon had barely reached general Manley himself while lying ill in bod, before all the generals of the r serve and other forces was a actively astir in its efforts to send benificial aid to restore the disordered front, and to bring all their energies and the opportunities of their organized divisions of fresh troops to bear on the advancing christian forces, and to dispatch a immense bodies of troops for the b n benefit of rallying the shattered lines. Troops advanced with numbers immediately be to restore order, and everything was done to bing every shattered column back to the Glandellnian trenches.

Not only in the center of the Glandellnian army but in many other sections of the whole three wings maybe the army can fly was this activity mani

d manifested, general Adeledegarbe being an informal union with Calmannia Shoemannia to try in unison for the relief of every section of the shattered Glandelinian army and to effect its retreat from the scene in comparative Bafty during the coming night.

The reinforcing divisions too were to organized as to make its efforts to rally the shattered Glandelinian front wonderfully effective. Every division of troops sent (Zimmernanian) for instance by Adele-de-garbs, to the efforts to restore the broken lines, went by doublt double time order, and the cavarly too were put to work at once, to rally the panic of ricken disordered armies...... Thus, almost later that afterno On during the second lull of the battle fifty million more men were in readiness to repell any further movement on the part of the dangerous christian armies. We too have to write here of the organization t of this help giving force of troops in which the flercest instincts of the army was embodied. The found too the first of the disaster had originated in the locality of the Glandelinian right wing previously to the time of the rally of the main christian left. Conferences were now held between the generals as to what other motive should be effected. Fresh divisions of defense were organized by general Bartonia, and at once joined with Cam Calminnia Shoemannia. This broader idea of a repelling any future christian "Storm" applied by him to other generals, was immediately adopted by all other Clandelinian generals and incorporated among their main duties with the purpose to repel the christian advance as vigoriously as it could be possible, when the one laught came, should it come, as a result of the continued rally of good portions of the torn up lines, the generals had succeeded in collecting and distributing to other sections large divisions of troops for the relief of other still retreating troops who were the participates of the Ste Mare Disaster, the Left Wing"War Hurricane. horror" the Chandelinian Right Wing Christian Counter Tidal Wave of assault, the destructive artillery ravages, the Vantura and Genitrix explosions of munitions and other battle disasters and other occassions of urgent need of sesistance, The Glandelinian armies therefore so badly smitten were now being definitely reorganized. But because of other days sections of the army being out of place it still lacked completeness of or ganization for effective stand against the Nationals, the collection of the disorganized troops still out of the fields being left to local cavarly troops as a rule imtrained in such efforts and work and unprepared for ready and effective aid in such a sudden contingency.

To obviate this dangerous weakness divisions of troops under general Gress were sent forth to do its part, hoping the christians would delay the attack long enough to enable this to be accomplished. Lenewed formations of the battle line was created, general Adeledegarbe was appointed to give his entire time to the effort, and to represent the Clandelinian reserve army in the distribution of divisions of troops to points builty needed and in may case of need. To aid himinthis work cavarly squadrons rode among the disordered ranks, the trained arm director too was aided by runined assistants, and by the mid of such officials and generals the effectiveness of the rallying work was being greatly increased all e in the collection of the troops and distribution of fresh troops and the other derands pon the activity of these gonerals. The movement of that the relief f orc ee , was div ided into three sections,, those under general Ad ele-de-garbe, Shoemannia, and Thomas Calerland (known as Freakin-the-nock by his enemice)))))) each of the strongest numbers and under the supervision of the ablest generals and other officers. As thus commized it was able in about three hours time and under steady artillery fire at that to reorganized the largest sections of the torn up and shat tered landelinian armies, with general Adele-de-marks as is its seconf head under the Irish-alandelinian clancy.... Ceneral kinckerbocker for eleven care out erintendant general of various standing Clandelinian armies, and also having the psition of I ational Directof was also in charge, and those giving the ermangency relif were officers of wide experience in vallying defeated armies during the hott est tattles and o also ifficers officers of the state.e.e.e. State. This new and effective re-organization of a shattered galdrelnian glandelinian army could and should 'e of immediate interest in f view of the fact that the ser services of all these Clardelinian generals had been and were still being called for , , , most uve ungently because of the dangers of the christians should they recover their own formations and rushed forward would easily capture the Glandelinian positions themselves and the effects of the two distances xdefeats would be bejond recovering from if not altogether fatal to the Standelinian arm... Cocapied too at the time during a full in the whemen' tattle for which as tiller also were being pushed forward by the efforte of all the Gandelinian artillery officers, a mader and ime increase test therefore had been made of the improved powers of these great Clandelinian officers. All Clandelinian generals and every officer in command of brighter, Corre, Commanion and regiments had lost not a momente time, leaping a troop into the treach with the a lertness and effectiveness for which they had long teen noble and notiable and which showed that they again and again as stated before ought to have been fighting for a far more worthler cause.. Even when Adelecdegarbe had recieved the news of the dire diegeter along the Glardelinian left and to other wings, and when it had stirred the hearts of all surviving plandelinian generals, there was then hardly any officer of any war whether high or low which did not join in the desperate offerts to rally the punic stricken hordes without ambients loss of time. From all rections came reports of the movements of fresh troops large and small. . d and the concentration of new tatteries Therefore by five oclock in the afternoon it was reported that over three quarters of the shattered army if not all rallied had been at least withdrawn to the cover of the rear, and the fresh troops were in the positions ready afor any movement of the christian troops

From general Germany Handonia came tidings that he has or had disput ched a special division of Omerian troops supported by cavarly and small hand carrying mechine gime and heavy field artillery, and that a second division had been made ready for sending as soon as they were ready to march the general recieving in farewell audience many of his staff whom the general at once sent to aid in the concentration. From other generals neve of similiar character was recieved and it was widely evident that the energies of the Glandelinian generals and all their officers were enlisted in causing the prompt responses nocessary to be gotten through. The first to push forward was the famois famous Glundelinian general of the same name as the christian general plain Nightlinger but of a entirely different man he being of the Zimmermannia and purmerannia Division Milliary Tar Committee who moved forward for the distribution of immense columns columns of troops for the restriction of the crushed clandelinian right.

Co great was the activity of these well named landelinian generals, that by the recent time of the afternoon mentioned before, after the second disasterous event of the battle had occured, general Adele-do-garbe had already IO, 000,000 men of the new forces ready for to repelli the christian armies, and much of this force was already in position. Then a little later with the numbers that were rallied and withdrawn they had grown to abouid twenty one millions and this huge body of men composing one parter of the remains of the main army of landelinia was ready for whatever may come. Yet general adeledegarho added in his statements tint some of the greatest difficulties to be overcome,, was the prompt distribution of the supplies for the covery covering batteries of artillery for ammunition was very low, and therefore even outside help from a new Clandelinian army would cer a inly certainly be welcomed. The last of the shattered divisions to be withdrawn to the shelter of the Glardelinian trenches was those of M assinia's , which had stood its ground against the christian assailants more stubbornly than the rest and had a number of still over half of its own forces.

These were being millied and restored with expedition. The remainder was still to follow and yet it was astonishing that the christian roops were not following up the advantage they had gained by starting forth to rage ano her desperate assault .. 2.2.2

"General Hanson vivian since you inquite is not a soldier of the Clandelinian cide, no more than you have been, and if have become a clandelinian citizen and an the Abbieum han armies are trying to conquer the Glandelinian nation for tryinical po purposes I have my rights to fight on the cide of lardelinia no matter what it ideality have Hies Violet vivian. "Did you not refuse to advance with the purpose to vor amicably ith the glandelinian general. Phellinin Tymerline to overthrow our own purpose at it Etheldreada because jou could not, when he came to see you for that purpose wo eeks ago!

"how do ou find that out?"
"That's all right. Pid you not?"she downded asain.

"He cave me no chan ce Vivian Girl."
"Why not sir?"

"That's my business too Miss. I cught to armost you for being on our soil seesby jou're a christian girl scout. "

"I could arrest you instead of you arrest me. You are alone with me sir and below me toffer than to tall that way. To note a traitor to you own country country just the same. You who are in commend of the army because ctuzy land by is too afighted to go out to fight himself because of a little insignificient cold, and have harded a big assault upon general Enrone left wing, and tried to enach it all to pieces just became jou ave an away that is hig and strong, and not afraid of what you thought was a weaker angules over the jou got. If you can whip general Enron to day I'd willingly currender smeelf to you as a prisoner. But you Can't and outle soon find that out, and you and your higher and more able bodied Diardelinian generals, and others who served under you-have tried to secure general Hansons left ring, and you are going now to dire ruin and defeat. You say you now general Hanson well. Mry didn't you defeat him them? You ought to be ashamed of yourself you Irish porlegner Outlaw to side with a cause that you know is so outrageously wicked."

"You are altogether wrong Vivian Cirl"answered general Clancy quietly. "This battle was none of my see ing, and didn't order the assault. Ceneral Calmannia Shoomannia the is quire camble of ta ing good care of himself, and his armies, lay claim to have emashed up your generals left wing good and proper twice before we got liefed, and on credit which really is not his but Adel -de-garbes. But mu my human nature resents downg it because your sistors caused this defeat."

"Is that so, we caused your defeat. How could we. We were here for that purpose I 'll adult that as we will not lie even to such a scoundrel as you are, but eir the cray inhuman fury of this butchery prevented us from doing an thing whatever. We couldn't get the slightest communication with general Euneon for any part of his line. It is simply because he cut generaled you. Resides I and my sisters resented your coming over here from your forlege country and cutting up our christian armion, you sho to do ever an listed American and a catholic. That is why we are so stung you have turned out a cringing Judas Te have served in the armies and led them in person. As for capturing us as spice I'd li e to see you try it. If any of us were even injured, by you it would be just be ted for your army and the whole of Glandelinia. My father the emperor would rather in his heart make Glandelinia a thing of history only before he'd see any of us even the lowest of the children in our country harmed by such accorduels as you and all clandelinians who make the main war on children of a christian mar mation, an wheard of thing inall hits history. Addlefob and Violate sisters dashed forward encited and fearful they would be too late. The voice of the imperized Princess rang out again. "Quick quick the quick and his stime sure, Hurry Sisters Hurry Addlefob for pitys sakeli'm soling down fast; is sisters came upon an stroar dimary scene. Before this visible had been set upon by a huge party of the enemy and as she had run with right and high neroes a little stroam for a large and high tree but in going into the stream where the water had been less than two inches deep she had got caught into a yellow sandy quagnire and the lands in anno believing she would perish anyow and hoping so didn't either bother to capture her or rescue her but went away to join their convades who wave on the senth. Had she went away to join their comrades who were on the march. Ind she went only a few steps further she would have got across the stream madity, but she did not had time to think of that. Glandolinians were shill within sight and while delegate and two of the Vivian Girls wont forth with the ropes and while deleted and two of the Vivlen Girls what forth with the ropes they always carry in their napac o, the others went behind trees to driver them in case they were attacked. Violet not seeding them come still emitted her ringing ories for help which had a cry of degrair in the sound this time, but they went with great hadto to her rescus. Exting to a tree close to the dan gerous quagmire of and, and opposite that where Violet was already in beyond her waist, deleted each her a line celling to her to great if firmly while joice threw her mother do that the help two reges by which in nearly a half a minutes time they had her saitly on land again but dripping wet and covered with the aliny cose.

The glandelinians had seen the rescue and though they might have admired the some in one way or regretted it it is hard to tell it was determined however by them that the party would not be able to escape, and they unshed forward with such speed that there can be littly doubt that they would have been so prompt to rush to their rescue. They word no impressed by the danger, that they missed their rifles together and cordinated the stand the rifles was desired their street while the reflect of the carry with pietols while the three readed the rifles together and cordinated that such a streety fire was continued that the forement of the Glandelinians appalsed appalled by their awful loss so enddenly rusled and recoiled. But a though the sit was deliberate as it should have been yet they had brought down appaired by their awall loss as authorny reales and recolled gut although the size was deliberate as at should have been, yet they had brought down a Clandelinian for every shot, and had not missed a che after recoiling the Clandelinians rallied and stopped short relied and then in greater numbers made etraight for those behind the trees trying to circle so as to get around their rear, and firing heavily as they did so.

"Soutter and o limb a 'ree." called out Adeleto, who saw they had no chance to relead.

"Spectror and climb a 'ree." called out Accision, who saw they had no chartes to relead.

"Yow was the time for " islet to recover, and relead her gum, and ta e shot at the leader of the Glandelinians, so as to cause deniusion and driw the rest of the foe off from their het perauti of Accision and the others, and indeed from begind another tree she centimed her chots so steadily, that the paris stricken Gkundelinians could not realize where the new danger came from, but while some retricated in while famile where there continued no after 'Velste sisters, thise Accision brought down a Clandelinian captian. Join he while some retricated in while famile the others continued on after 'Velste sisters, thise Accision brought down a Clandelinian captian. Join he while some corrected in while famile the others could not appelling were so alarmed that they stopped to help the run while the root of the girls recorded fire with pistols."

"But her sisters could not desert the her, until heavy debe was not mangled by the fall and by that time the Glandelinians were too close to them so that they would not have the time to becape by climbing a tree.

"It sure did seem as it it would go ill with them all for no gum of the party was loaded, and the Clandelinians were almost upon them, when most providentially but weakpiectedly, Adolefob had found a great upon them, when most tooked and this he threw and it expladed with torrific force among the Clandelinians find gone every one of them who were so close to Vilet's stora while Vilet hervell nose her rifle again and again firing on the other Glandelinians, and so great was the bayous ever from the firing or one girl and the explading of the grounds that the remainder of the Olandelinians find penicetricted from the scene and to sover.

However frobably sensing comething of this themselves they now reducibled 'eir most desperate eff onto the meetres they now not desperate eff onto and the sample of the stack and the campaint of the sample of the stack of the many ime, general Quirble discovered a value able spot at which to alm the blows.

Sr Striking for the weekest smot of the Glandelinian any the christian general moved a bridage around the enemy reatr rear by accident,, and at the impact of the blow light as it was th Clandelinians gave way in some confusion, and fell back instinctivel retreating for such a surprise attack, and therefore general quishie directed all his efforts tward hurling heavier bodies of troops upon the rear of the Glandelinian fores. He even struck again and hurld a heavier body of troops upon the left flank of the assailant also aided by a large squadron of cavarly. With yells of terror the Gland linians broke into a t-rrific b panic.

A section of the hattle raged close to Hangar Station, and here too the Glandelinians gave vent to a horrid yell and charged the christi line stationed there with all the hedious ferocity that they could gather/. Indeed itseemed us though the Glandelinians here had musters mustered all their remaining vitality and thrown it into this

The Christian generals their minds coordinating perfectly and quick to see ovenings and tak e advantage of them and equally mi k quick to realize the advantage of retreat began to recoil bac to their strongest position to a avoid closing with the mad chargin charming column of troops and the bristling wall of bayonets but as the line broam to recail and as they did so, an a new column of Glandelinian tree s cameupon their right flank. Tur a moment this battle line was helpless, and in that brief moment the awful line of battle in front could be upon them with those horrid bayonets. General Tanar Banson knew it and saw it ensuring and so quickly did he act that the christian line had scarcely started to recoil in another direction fighting desperately as it did so he launched forward his own troops from a secure hidden mot upon the two sections of the charging columns and struck both of them on the flank//.

on the Hank/.
These Glandelinian assailants were almost enviroled by the new force of christians with their other enemies between them, and they struggled must desparately to free themselves from their three lines of christian assailants. There the three lines clung to the fully of the wildest attack they had ever made, and the enemy lunged formard to struggle and fight their way to safty and to rend the line of chris isn attack/. But that brief instant of delay had been sufficient to enable the christian line that had been firs attacked to regain their forestion and ere the Glandelinian troops could make a gap in the n entireling lines, these troops was upon the enemy from front and rear, and at lest the Glandellnian were helpless. It was useless to structle any longer. Tacape was out off, and finally after the lusses had become unbearable the th the chief Glandelinian general surrendered the remainder of the whole Glandelinlan column in this locality,

In the maintime one of the couriers had been sent by general Vivian even while this terrifif betale was in progresseto give warning at the child scout camp that a battle was in progress. Therefore he hastened back to that portion of the comp at St Ttheldreds and without attempting to make himself presentable teck the fastest horse to the town. On the way he was fiercely assailed by some Clandelinian cavarly men who overtook him in the chace but shough in jured he managed to kill then all.

Put well nigh exhausted from his severe struggle the officer reaching the camp, and then Gertrudes headquarters staggered un the stairs, burst into the room and announced that the battle was raging furiously and that general Vivian was winning the victory.

"Get our horses out as quickly as you can Harry"suggested Angeline Jannings to her orderly, "Gorge help me wash up this injured soldier and we'll puthin to bed and then hump out there. After a questioning glance at Jean, which was answered with a mod, Deleres dashed for the locker and produced a clean uniform. Willingly the tw boyaccuts themselves assisted the soldier to remove as much as possible the marks of his recent encounter with the Glandel intens//. Quickly divesting himself of his soiled and blood stained garrents, the soldier put on his new uniform, and dashed down the stairs fastening buttons as he went. Rehind him clattered the others, Penrod suying he was going elsewhere.

"I'm going too if you have room for me "said Gladys Wenthworth

"Hop upon your horse then"Invited Fred, "Rut you'll have to hang onto your teeth, for we are upt to be persued by Glandel iniansouselves and will have to rideour horseslike a runaway. Glandelinianslike s to do more harm to children than any one else you know."

Not a second was lost by the party in mounting their fastest horses and they started at once in the direction of the battlefield// where even now they could hear the sound of the conflict. Then just as they s started down the Ventura Road a large squadron of Glandelh ian horsenen which shopened to be the swift fleeted "Wheelers" appre appeared in sight. A fierce persuit and race began. Across the Reconstruction bridg bridge they began to demonstrate the value of the girls advice. The Glandelinians opened fire, but the bullets went wide of their mark. The fugitives returned the fire with the same result. In the speed of the persuit the Glandelinians in the foremost caught up with them, and two of them lances at the ready were so close that they dashed right in front of the fugitives in a way that threatened collision but they were cutwitted and the fut fugitives without aloss on either side got through, and by their during and skill avoided even an accident.

Nothing doing. They're headed for general Vivianslines endmust he turned off from that direction if not captured or stopped."

During the time that the persuit and race required a moderate pe pace, nothing unusual occured, though each of the little riders showed their ability and skill as good horseriders even in dangerous

Jean glanding back saw the Glandelinians coming coming clower again. They knew the way the Glandelinians were ridne now, that if they cought them theywould suraly be goners, and so they urged their own horses again at real breakneck speed. They went so fast that they couldn't see any thing at all of the lin decape. In theur mad dean they ran down a good number of chickens. They were easily keeping the Glandelinians at some distance behind, and asone of them fired. Angeline Jennings having a stone in her pocket threw it with straight aim and brucked the fellows teeth right down his throat. In spite of the nervious tens o tension under which they all were laboring, they joined in the leugh which Jean started at the sight of the man spitting out some of his teeth-

"You're rook done a good deed all! right Angeline" laughingly laughed remarked Angeline Richee. "And for speed both sides of us have certainly made a record."

"Heng on your horses good and keep your heads down. "worned Henry over his shoulder. "We're go ing to getout of this mess if we can." Wor a few mine miles conversation was impossible. Their expert manipultations of their horses a produced a burst of speed that wo I woul would have been positively dangerous in less whilful skillful child scouts and they began to leave the persueing Glandelinians quite some distance behind. The boy and circlecont a always book great wide in keeping everyone of their horses in perfect order all the time in preparation for an emergency suho such as the present, and therefore felt no less confidence in the horses than they did of their meethod of riding. To the Glandelinians to try and catch up with them was unything but lplease pleasant and they were glad when their fugitives abrustly slackened wace

At once the reason for this sudden change of smead was superent. A Column ofpurple coated troopers was in front and the leader had his hand upriserd. Looking back, the pergued saw not a single clandelinian in

"What's the trouble officerf"demended Angeline Jennings.

"You are speeding the among direction if you wish to find the christian army und r und r v under general Wivian"Was the response at most orbity delivered.

"Where is the christian lines !"

"About ten miles shead."Was the reply.

"Will you wish to occompany us as a guarding patrolf"asked Angeline

"Yes. I'd rather. T like your company."

"Maybe because so many of us are good looking?"laughed Angeline A Jennings.

"Yes forone thing. Another thing because what you and we are ." "Oh T see. Well come on" heartily invited Dolores Mic-Hollester Jennings."Y u'd batter surround - us though as if we were your prisoners forthere is no telling when the flandelinians may come back in greater numbers"she added. "Hurry up. We are deleyed already. """ WS

Scarcely had the officer and his fifty men and other officers surrounded the calvacade of boy and girl sourts and the escur ting soldier, when around the hend of the road came another big party of Clandelinian horsemen almost suddenly and just narrowings is sing the chance of riding down upon the others. The girls and the soldiers urged their horses to a high speed in spite of the yells of derision from the Glandelinians, who had come upon their very heels as it were.

"They're going to open fire" one need Henry. "If all of us keep ourselveslow on o r our horses they won't be oble to hit am of us." Regardless of the firing of the pursuers, they were not hit and maintai mainteined a vicerious pace, and soon outdistanced the persuans without loss/// and after twentyminutes or so of hard riding were easily within sight of the betile field, and within easy hearing of the severe firing. Scarcely had the holted their horses to take in the view. then an explusion occurred close by. The miniscouts themselves losped to the ground. Anceline Jennings - trendy had her pictol in her hand so that they would not be surprised in case Glandelinians would appear from an unexpected direction. Dashing tward the little Greek near by the girl and howecouts were surprised to observe a body of troops on what appeared to be a retreat, and also saw on a small rise of ground a group of officers, and an unber of strange boy and girlscout s about their own age who were inspecting a partly shottered section of the christian line in front of them. At once these girl and boyscouts were recog nized as members of the bands of Rangers and Flamingoes which had been encountered in the plain by the three buyscouts earlier in the morning.

Angeline Richee paused a moment, swung her hand to herhip o pindkat pocket where she carried an automatic pistol, and then remounting her horse, and followed by the rest, advanced tward the crowd of officers, and child scouts.

"What in the world does this mean? Who's the Glandelinian commander attacking general Vivian now!Has Tak Tamerline rallied?" she inquired brusquely of one of the officers, who seated on his horse,, was wiping the sweat from his forehead.

"Why Miss Jennings, "replied theofficier whose n ame was Colonel Padro Nesturis"General Vivian in his sawance yesterday found that a new Glandel inian army confronted us, and he was determined to push on and so thismorning early he attacked, and though we had beenherd hit four times the enemy is getting decidedly the worst of it. But & aportion of the line now is in danger. I was sitting i on my horse alittle wave back there by the ferm gate younder(no inting) not thinkin g of denger when I happened to look in that direction, and saw a column of Glandelinians coming up from behind that little hillyonder. I telegraphed to general Vivian Right away, and then cameout here with our own commands, and so did the otherss. Just as we did so and met the enemy we almost surrounding surrounded the would be floakcatte kers attackers, who by desperate fichting managed as if by miduals to squeeze through our enclireling lines. I guess we would have got the best of the fools even then if it hadn't been for reinforcements coming to their help. But too the enem; if they had conscious r would have got the best of us if 15 hadn't been for these young boy and dr lawuts who signalled warnings to general Kindernine, who helped by throwing for ward his antilleng. They saved thisportion of our own; from disaster and caused the flankers to get almost captured too. They have done bravely indeed. I'm sure we'll be master of the field before the day

Releasing hi her gresp on the sutomatic(tick) Angeline Jennings dissourdismounted the horse, and stepped forward with hand outstrotched th to the foremost leader of the group of child scouts. A leader a girl at that with hadly bruised lips and a blockened eye confus dly extended her hand to grasp Angelines proffered palm. Angeline's shake wasindard a hearty one.

"T ment to thank you on behalf of the Rangers boy and girlscouts" he began Tou have given us valuable service, and we we willnot be out to forget it. We names Angeline Jean Jennings. I want you to meet my friends and courades. "she added turning tward her followers and chums, who had followed her closely.

"We met them earlier in the day. "smiled the girl. "But hour efforts to worn the general of what was toing to take takenines we mat with the Glandelinians twice. I remember the second meeting well. One of the Glandel inians almost had me and because I fought him eff he harded n me this, and this"indicating her injured eye and lips. "Those Glands linions are sure some "fine scrappers all right" as a especially when it comes to fighting us kids, and therefore we're glad to frustrate them We are also glad to get acqueinted with you and your foolowers."

"Mildred Hensen thinks so too." offen announced another minber of the

With a shoepish grin the girlscout called Mildred Menson now steped forward, extending her hand first to the highest girlscout afficers and then to the rest.

"I'm oblif obliged to you all she stated, addressing Angeline Jennings herself."I guess it was just that trivalng that the Glandelinians needs that's coming to them. We have been talking things over since we came here and we have decide decided that we would wish to be an addition to your force if you'll have us. You look wratty good indeed to

"Harrah"Shouted Fred. "Misas Jennings here's a chance to fam an additi addition toour own to re-laceour loss at Yen Vantura Road. What do you

"Wo'll talk it over. "Angeline Jennings answered. "It monns a grant deal to us all right."

"Wel general Vivian is out to do and dare again, and if he can get the other force of troops left behind at St Etheldreds instine he'll easily fix the Glandelinian away said one of the scouts. "Otherwise I don't believe he could worst the enemy throughout the whole day. But nevertheless you musn't forget to let us know about our addition to your fore of her and mirl scouts."

Having followedmore slowly, general Fredrick Nance now approuched the child secute.

"Well "he said" If you wish I willsond a messenger to the general in charge of thet division. But I warn you for your sakes no going too near the firing line. The battles too severe. "Then exemining the group more c, c closely he cried;

"Hello Angeline Riches. What brought you here. I thought you was with your fathers army who is supposed to be coposing Myletza in his advance on Angelinia Agathia. *"

"Hallo Your "xcallency"Rep led the girl. "I've been in general Viviens for quite a length of time now."

"Her did you get here anyhow?"Inquired the general, who proved to be non none other than the friend of violet, and her sisters.

Fx 1 Explanations of their long and many days adventure down the fleed waters on the huge raft so far as was remembered was given, where in they all reclaved full credit from Angaline Jennings and others. They dwelth at length on the corrage of all of them (not mentioning the two deserters) and shilling as well as their spirit of fairness.

"Well all I've got to say."d caded the general at the conclusion of the tale"Is that I'm sorry I never had the chance to ride with jos and your socuts on that huge raft. If you'll give ma a ride on that his raft some day. I'll be much obliged. Anyhor or girl that can go through adv entures like that without fl n flinching cen't be deemted or defeated by any glandelinian general or his troops."

"Thank you"realied Angeline Riches. "We don't ex cood anything during our adventures unless we know it is necessary. Just now we are puzzled, greatly puzzled about the identity of the one who might have wouned this Glandelinianarms and conted it to threw itself in general Viviens water

"Marte it's something like those two Mutt and Jeff Spine, who's some because they can't frustrate the attempts of Violet and her sisting to find clues as to the cause of the Abbisana flood"wentured Fred. "Some Glandelinians spice lay play snakes in the grass, aspecially if they are down on their luck a little "

"My consciouscence" interrupted Henry" says to look out for a tall man who resembles "r "futt" who is dark complexioned, and who is smooth shaven and wears small mustachoes, and black hair. I'll bet i he is in some way connected with the whole conditions of the war and hates chri christianslike " child hates easter oil. Tembaps ha's trying to stop general Wivian or something."

"A nost accurate description of "Mr Matt" laughed Hans. "I think I saw him in my dreems last might......

Angeline Jennings planced quickly twordHenry.Often in the past she had discovered that Henrys insight andpowers of jumping at cunclis conculsions had been the means of leading them allout of puzzling si'us'ions, and now assumed that the boys jocular manner was simply a clouk for more x serious thoughts. Using the strange signal of girls cout means she signalled;;

"Come to one side. I wany want to talk to you...! !!... Therefore the lad walked slightly apart from the group now proceeding tward the christian lines, and she then asked him in a low tone;

"What do you know Jimmie! Did you see anything .!"

"I certainly did."declared the boy. "I just happened to have seen a man of his description early this morning near your camps I waid no ottention at first but them I remember now. That's all."

"That's f mmy. T was sure you had discovered a clue. Was there mmy companion with him. ?"

"No. He was alone. It also seemed to me to be the only natural conclusion to be reached, and so I followed him. I have recognized him by the descriptions gi van to me of him by Penrod. Here we are getting ready to shadow the two spins andanagent them from frustrelling Gartrudes intentions. Also you just come in with a story about these six accomplices of theirs who has stolen the " Government plans. Then strongly this battle breaksout so shortly after the long emagement at St Etholdredn. At Lebanon Menley is taken down with a cold, and "Trishman" Clane lends the ermy at the hattle there and gets licked by Honson Tivian. Then a forest fire rages near Labenon and the Princesse have a narrow escape. Why should all this be the work of --- well some interested party if it wasn't him. ?"

"That's a good solution as good a one as any other we now have. "decide Angeline Jennings, drouping the subject on supreaching nearer the buttle lines. "Lat's not so ene further or we'll be in the range of fire. I have some important matters to discuss with the inlacout leaders . I must return to camp and meet Gertrude Angeline."

After instructing the toys and others to regard to what thepurpose is how to go on the spying trip and so forth, Angeline Jennings talked a few moments with the other group of child scouts who had expressed a desire to to an addition to them. Then giving final direction to the three boys and talling them to start at once she returned compound. The return journey of Angeline Jennings and her girl followers was completed without incident. Entering the room of Gertrades head marters, Angeline Jennings found this mesonge;

"Gell George Redeliffs on the secret phone line at once. He has toportant news/".f::M7

"Ill try and stop those two Professional Glandelinian spies if I can" uttered Penned to himself, and going to his tent he took an extra nevelver from his me uply of arms, loaded the twenty chambers, and thrust it into his holster. "Where are for going Pannod. " " sh a askid. "I'm heading for tabanon to frustrate those two spies." "Bon't go to Tebanon to day. "sh warned.

"May Task why!"

"It is my wish, and my wornin w also Penrod. It's dangerous. Those spice know my intentions easily and are moused. They're dangerous. Weep maky. " The memory of his pret meetings once or twice probably three times with these two Professional International spies rushed through Penrods mind already unbalanced by the events of the past, and he became conscious of a great rush of range and anger that seemed to sweep through him like some impersonal force, and hold him against his will.

"D on't you know, Miss Archburg that without that you are entitled ti to express your wishes and warnings to me in the light ofour acquaintance, when four Gertrude Angulines's have passed me to day and either have entered the case or tried toff desanded Pourod.

"And ny sufty is your care and interest?"

"Yes, you are not to go."

"fiss Aronburg --- "

"I ask you not to go. T imploration than. The spice are onto us." "How come they know what we are u up to then?"cried Penrod angrily. "Have we strange socuts within our lines that have worked against you and me Gertrude since we came here in the army, are vounceitively sure that you are not mistaken in showing your good reason why I should head your advice, and not gofflow cour they known intentions."

"They know everything"she answered quietly. "But you wast not go where. please. Shofield Penrod T have none here to beg it of you."

"You have dome to me from the return of your scouting tour end now her me not to go forth into the energy lines to frustrate the two Professional spies. "said Penrod losing all his saif con rol. "Put then I have a better lan which we both can do. I met on my way this morning two and from the camp, some personages that resumbly myon a great deal, and who refused to salute me or even recognize me. I don't know who they are or what they were up to but The suspicious. that they may be even again mideit men or Glandelinian boy or sirlscome actively allied withour worst enemies, who seek for a paltry sun of money to ruin our countrys cause, and driven general Tivien and Mansons army out of the Pengell State. and paused her voice choking. "You believe they be here to enruge in some plot of the "tutt and Jeff"spies! The is insufferable. Thre we couldn't be in such an swful situation as that. Ah surely Penrod you are traing to play a joke on me"she pleaded/.

Penrod looked at her stubbornly. He would not let himself be moved for he knew he was not joking. He could however see the quiver on her lips, her agitation.

"No T'm not joking"he said.

"So then it's true they have gove here and tried again to humiliate me by getting me believed as if I was traitor ugain. "she whimpared. "Come then. "she cried suddanly jerking the rains. "Gone Penrud. Let's gas back to camp. We must frustrate them before its too lute, that is if they not

She sourced her horse and gallopped wildly away, but Penrod follow followed as seen as he wheeled his horse. It was a mad thing to gallop like that along the stony roud issides the river but they were in an even awful hurry. He felt ashumed of the station, and yet now both he and the little gill were sustained how grimer detert is determination than any they had ever known. They we I would not let themselves he hoodwinked by any fors. Their wrath which made then doubt in any can who were strongers now, which had suffered then to shadow every stranger many times before kindled them to fighting heat/.

The reputation unter which they had chafed since the day Garbrude had been mistaken for being becoming truitor, should stand then in good stand that day. They had encountered nothing but host lity whener whenever they were within sight of strangers, and they had lost reason and ludgment now under the last of the many treacherlous blows. They minted to meet these four "Gertrude Angelines" face to face, p erhaps that chance would come, but nevertheless inlie lieu, they would exercise their rights against all Glandelinians whether men or boy and girlscoats together as all were equally as hed. They mean't to concurs them if possible, and they grew hotter as they rode swiftly slong the river read, realing off the ciles behind them, two lovely figures, their hearts rencerous age inst the injustice mated out to them so often, hitter assinst Glandelinian generals, bitter against all its course but fi funious in their resolution to show all Glandelinters its whether ilg orlittle that namer of girlsocuts they were.....

At least the tents of the telegont enga prients begon to show through the tr c. They therefore rode withit faster, fingering the revolvers in their bolsters. But then they reached the outskirts of the comp they halted their horses for a short while and considered. Their instinct was at first for physicial violence, such violence as alone coul could appear their rage. They I istened to the distant bubbab within the distant comp. They then mode past a Dem and approached the outlying tents of the englemments. As they neared the first line of guards who knowing then permitted then to p see wase, they produved ride one; them in a burns the minklast from and gray w harm of what arem d to be an old riest of fordern lifth sursoled by the lownward reflection. It have the effect of the painting of some hadiouspicture of some old worthy that belonged to the "Bountifu; "Infernal Regions. They did not know who the old GNore was, but the allusion escaped Penrod and Gerbrude, but there was something hornible about the smile lal naloce The two shild secute shiddered, and then they shook the renclication from them, and continued feeling a stronger resolve harden them as they nearled the comp. They turned into the little company street and saw the camp actir is all accute had returned. The chades of him own head marters were drawn too, and the lamblight from within as it waskind of dark even in the day because of the fire smoke, threw the shadows of those within in grotesque attitudes. She and Penrod dycided to enter the Mess Hall. A group of Form chattering upon the porch, censed their conversation and stood at atten Add Genturie , C Pennod appended the threese sie s steps. Whoever this new Gertrud. Angeline was seemed to be partly a coward, perhaps because of so many against him, andknowing the fury of christian girl and toy scouts. As Gertrude grasped him by the shoulders, the duplicate who hade p in advoitness for what he lacked in respons, twisted like an ell est dived under the grasping sens of those shout his, and rished twend the rear entrance sou shouting a blaspheny as he ran. What it was Gertrude and Penrod did not know. They percieved that the boys and girls third to introop hibs and some who surved about him like a park of volves, snowling and by ing to thrust as at the say with the mives which they had drawn from their leather belt shouts. "Gentrudes dunliquite, fighting like a little and child, sent them masshing to the floor, cleared his way awain, and had reached the door and was about to open it, when Gertrid a and Penrod grasoed at him. But the spy was fust a second too quick. He darted through and the door thrown violently back, struck both Penrod and Gertrudeuso violentlyuponthe head at the same time as to lar them flat on their backs with a resounding crash. But they were upon their f t in an instant and not minding the pain caused by the collision, though almost crying from it passed through the doorway in parsuit. ! ? THB

The Kitchen hall of the Mess house was close by At the rear and contig continguous with it, had been or were stillsome of the officers house stables. Here were usually kept two or three down houses and this stable was as solidly constructed as the other buildings recently owned by the farmer Mear by new stables also were standing and the adjoining shanty being no longer needed for its crutimal purpose, was turned into a seri of house by the addition of windows a chimer ind en upper floor. The door connecting the two places had been mailed up but Penrod had opened it that morning in the course of using the lower part for horses.

As the spy dashed up into the stable, Angeline Riches also appeared and as the threece entered the stable, they closed the door behind them, and botted it shut. It was only then that Gertruden duplicate realized he had run into a trap. The stable indeed was disply lighted by two oil lamps, placed in the wooden window cabractures or crosses. On either side or the stables lengths, run the horse boxes with the horses in them, with horness and bridgles and saddles benefing above them on honcers hooks. There was a pressed of two feet or so down the domine. The stable contained "Gerbord's Angeline", who had coved bringelf within the stable wondard; coposite to the minimae, but Penned around at him define ly. Now you listen here. We have done our duty on our side, and even despite it all have never yet molested any of you Glandelinian boy and girlscut s that we can remember. There should at least have existed rouce between you and us, and we didn't see why war should go on between children of our side and children of yours. This is a mans war. We hate trouble. We don't want to hur t you if you go sway from out camp blindfolded. Wake up your mind to that or we'll have you face a firing squad as a spy. You tried to duplicate Gertrude aAngeline and that's a gravor offense than spying. It's treachery. I suppose the other three duplicates who may or may not now be in the camp were your Confederates. Go back to where you came from and never dare come lock here again to interfere with us. What do you say. You are alone here, no Glandelinians to help you, trapped in this barn, and everyone your enemies. If our force gets hold of you we cannot say you and they'll linch you. If we have to execute ou you as a spy its your own fault of rashness. What do you say!"

"I haven't come here to say but to give your boy companion there called Penrod a thrushing."answered the say seconfully. "The thrushing that I promished him many works ago."

"Mot so very mach"the boy stated, "But Spinsch will be the most. I like it better than anything else."

"Well bega"said Angoline Tennings "the work was go through have always made us hungry. If it were not for you and your strong appetite Fred I suppose me'd forge' to out."

"Means at the boy admitted,"But if that's the case, and wadid do a lot of work and were not hungry that would be a sign there's something wrong with us. Then we had better see a dector."

"That doctor do you suggest we sho ld visit. "

"Go see our fincus Doctor Castor Oll"shoulded Fred. "Nov there gots the magic for the Mess Call. Now T'm off for the Mess tent. The wishes to follow me.!"

They all decided to go, and in a short time the boy and girlscout officials were seated in one of the toy and girlscout these Palls the girls using one particularlong back, and the boys and other, and want as polying their badly as ded appetings without that they had

"Forget him, here are the dinners." oried Fred. During the progress of the mest the conversation turnedupon ordinary subjects remote from enumilitary project. None of them now cared to discuss the matter envisors since three strangers were so suspicionally eyeing them and by mutual consent the talk finally had drifted to other topics. Then dinner was over they propered tours coad to Radoliffes tent, where the boy was awalting their coming. As they left the mass hall, they saw Gentrade Angeline enter the place with Penrod and two others whom they couldn't see in thee, and though they looked about for the man who they had recently observed at the window, he was nouwhere in sight. It took them fifteen minutes to reach Radeliffes he dtent, and soon they were scated in the tent discussing with that boyscout gentleman the details of their proposed journey. t appared that their experience on many other trips and adventures in the ters long before these would enable them to reduce their harmage and other impediments to a minimus.

"Where's the fire"asked Dolores for the fun of it.

"In your pistol of course" chuckled Joy.

However at the command given the second than Nolores raised her automatic rife dkr directly tword the target. Then with the word"fire"she rapidly pullled the triger, sending all twenty shots hurtling tward the explosives, but with no result.

""ell Great Fros Fruzen Hut boxes aim T airing wrong. ?" he gaened.

All the others looked surprised. They went to see. "No you hit the thing all right" said Fred.

"Well why didn' t it explode."

"I don't know. Haybe there only suge other way of exploding it. Maybe by throwing."

"Who will volunteer to throw it!"

"I'm the one --- out admitted polores. "It might explude in your hand.

"I'm going to try it"enid Frad.

"No you don't "said polores intervening as he was going to pick it up. "If it goes by throwing the very notion of your arm might set it off too soon. I'm going to set it in a different way and the try my pistol at it."

They then went at a respective distance and she firedo no shot at it. Mingled with the reverberations of her pistol shots a sharp thunder ous detonation was heard, and a great cloud of make cross where the stumps had been, and which told that again polores pistel aim had been thickn true. Piners of the stumps and great clouds(pouds) of earth and ground debris thrown high u up into the air by the explosion come 'w bling about them despite the distance they were in confusion causing them to scatter in different directions to social the full by g fremments. A lump of a stump not polores sank mank on top of the head. Then is everything settind down , the child acouts astunide doub of their wits examined the result.

"Just burgine where we would have been with that stare in the

"Lat's set back to work and setout of thiswiner before suldiers come thinking a flent stimek is attempted. "microsted Gladys. "This makes me Bort of norvious, I want to get busy,"

Annual file the how and cirbouts hatened book to their damp to still the starm of their many comrades who had swemmed out and so the coing to come forward to find out what had noticed all the notice. They know by name of the Location where the best in that had been tar lasting for many months was rading, and therefore they exemined their big "debugt Globe of the world". Then the most had been properly located they pronounced their experience fit, and made a statch of the spot on paper. They were as quiet now and as busy as they would be in school, not a sound from their line. Dolores was the "Teacher"and though child ron they were were net alaying cohoolalthar. They worn jubilant at the result. Glady's robtun sot un to look at the glone for she had just forgotten something she had seen before. As she did so she now sumething attrance like a hand trying to great conothing from the tent opening she was there like a flash and she had crabbad the hand and had sank her nice "little" teath into it good and number while a sound outside did credit to a men dwine of Hadrophoble/.

This shows that to trifle with Abbieannian wirl and boygoouts is a minist sucided thing, especially when the spy is not crafty enough to do it without detection.

"Vall I muss we can be about ready to start as soon as we pack up our kits and Gertrude shows up. "announced Fred as "landy's entered. "Since they got that one scamp though, we had betterlook out for more soum of clandelinia. Comrades let's make things hum around here. We haven't got time. "He must have slipped past me for I saw no one admitted the lad. "We 11 you certainly were not watching carefully enough then." said Dolores."Tt's a wonder he didn't take it into his mind to kill you. It's also to four safty to watch me boy. Be careful next time. Your the guard, and your danger is greater if you're not watching."

"bet's telephone Hadeliffe, that we are ready, and only am waltin g for Gertrude to come, and also ask him to arrange for the expedition also, "suggested Joy.

"Good idea Joy, get him on the wire for me willyou "said dlady's. "I would like to have Operator Four Six one City, Camp No

She got the number and told Radoliffe all about it, even about the spy who was killed. Radeliffs was indeedopleased at the announcemen t and surprised that one of the spies got it so quickly. Arrangements had been made, he sold to secure passage for them on the big raft unce more leaving first to the Abbieson territory two days later. They would thus have ample time for trials and a adjustments of their rew troops before the expdition started.

Accordingly the girl and buy scout officials worked in drilling their newcome with a win that afternoon.

"I tell youwhat"Fred spoke up as the boys and girls all of them were outing a little afternoon lunch"We have been very fortunate Thank God and His Bleesed Mother, so far in avoiding serious trouble, and outwilling those trying to spy on us. I hope we start away on the trip all right. You know prayer is the real thing that helps us. The saying always always is "God helps those that helps themselves."

"Oh we're the regular child army of little side steppers"gleefully assented Dolores clapping her hands. "We always have hoodwinked the enemy."Then she added looking more solume now" "I wish weknew who the would benurderers were who seem to be trying to put usout of business or spy on us or rob us. What is that saying: Know about it shead of time and you've gotfour arms. !"

"Forear Forewarned, is forearmed, Dolores, corrected Glady's"You sure are a tomboy. You seem to only think of your boxing gloves and other things like that."

"Yes. Wall one thing I'll say. If I could get the book that put those twenty dynamite sticks in in that box of uniforms, who tried to burn down our compearly thismorning, and has been spying on us, he 'd think I had brass wings on "stoutly maintained the little girl. "Tho Thuse Glandelinians deserves it all right. "agreed Joy.

"Puthw willwa magemenage when we start down the river or ride out on the flood again if any of the flood is still loft op here. "asked Henry."And besides all territories north of usnight now be overrun by Glandelinians."

"Why we will Ak Ask God to help us."

"What will be our first move?"Dolores, inquited Fred.

"Pass the potatoes"put in polores(code words used by scouts) "We can't pass through that se stion you suggest"said Joy"Main thing we'll have to discover whether these spds have arived and if thye they're going tward that battlefield by the route of ruinred ruined Abbicann. If the they was not, we'll wait and learn what direction they're really goine going. Raduliffe has already stated that they were going to go on an armoured raft of some sort construct ed by Glandelinian min military construction engineers. Withour own raft we ought to beat them to Abbieann by at least two days."

"But we's he stopped even by strange christian troops wuldn't he wouldn't wef"naked Hans.

"I believe it could bepossible, but it's better than being stopped by the enemy . "admitted polores." If we are discovered we'd have to fight hard if its the enemy or we'd all be seized, and even if we escaped afterwardsour parent of the six spins would be delayed. But whatever the result wesust take the chance." ""

"But how could it bepossible wo'd be stopped by christischristian troops!"demanded Glady's."They sure can see we're christian bo and girlacouts Who' d make such waistake as that?"

"You forgot Glady's we are all going in disguise."

"Go on now. Why should we need to go in disguise. Do we have to put on that hated Glandelinian uniform again!"

"Fact"asserted Dolores" (ou see the trip we need to make will be through territores where Glandelinian armies are rampant. Now they may good parts of the Abbieann ter i territory is in the possession of the enemy. If all Glandelinian armies were far away from this territory there could be no hinderence of any persons trying todiscover the Abbinan Explosion mystery, I understand."

"What else could any one do in trying to make such a discovery." "Well they could use all sorts od of detecting implements and so on. I don't know all the works. Each Scientist has a meas of his own. They were going to "Steam Shovel"the districts."

"Make labor to find clues. That's funny."

"Bollieve me"ennounced Evangeline St Claire forcefull," hen I get back on a trip from Abbicann I'm going to write up this subject for the encyclopedia" Abbieson blown up by girlscout Evangeline St Claire. Uncle Tom told her to do it and Steon Legree furnished me the explosive."

"Go shead"said Dlo polores. And you'll go to the Hoosecow."

"No to the bottomlesspit."said Eva.

"When we get backwith those six spice"announced Angeline Francis "We'll all have seen Abbieann enough to go through it again in our

"Hurry when we get back. Shall we decide which part of Allieunn we say we were at, or shall we say we'll leave that for later consideration." "Better wait. "Advised Dolores.

Why. 1#

"B w Bacause there is no telling what might happen."

Eded Indeed how true har words were soon to be proven. Could any of all of the how and girlscouts have enticipated the many incidents that were to occur, and the great dangers that confronted them parhaps their hear s hearts would not have been so light nowever care and all sorts of glouny forebodings had no place in their healthy young minds, and they discussed the future only with thoughts of success.

Half an hour later all of the boy and girlscout officers only were exemining the great raft boats every one of the old timers among the boy and girls were ve very familiar with the great raft constructed for Gertrude Angeline and her force by Abyesinkilian construction military n engineers at the beginning of one of her main trips down the flood, and all new comers had visited every place fromsten to stern

Theadditionto the scouts to had been welcomed, and the returning of so many of those who had been wounded in the Squabble on the Vantura road made the situation far more f avorable than it would have been otherwise. Although the rules of military laws forbid any p rson occupying the officers quarters of the big raft while the raft would be under way, Gertrude who is in main charge of the raft had long before laughingly promisshe promised to give as many of her friends as possible lessons in navigation as long as they were willing to learn. And to avoid any complications, she had often asked any new scholar to sign articles which would maken them members of the crew of the highest rank of scouts while on board, and thus permit them on the officers quarters under the direction of the officers. Accordingly not a few boys and girls had signed the papers though considering the matter a huge loke and had also speculated on various ways of spending their time. Engerly now the child scout officers themselves rehearsed every step of cleaning up and prepuring the huge boat for the trip. A special duty was assigned to each of the boys and girls so that no time whatever was to be lost when they were once on their way with all the R giment. Between their excitement over the proposed task, the coming wonders of the trip, and the prospects of the new adventures before them they were all has yell this time. As they were thus busy, imagine their surpri surprise when a great master of soldiers in purple from a far distant section not at all from the direction of general Vivians army v come abound the raft, and the child scouts recieved a susmons to the chief offe officer of these visitors, which one of the officers had delivered. Wonderingly the chief leadure of the boy and girlscouts obeyed the call, won't specialating on the cause.

they did not have to whit long bfore an officer in charge of the troops appeared. He held in his hand a yellow paper, which the girl and boyaccut officers at once recomized as a wireless telegraph slip.

The offder who appeared to be a general but who was a perfect stranger to them had a very serious look on his face, and this at first filled the boy and girlscout officers with suspicion and the apprenehsion that at first he end his followers may be Glandelinians in disguise with the purpose to trap and capture them all. Wonderingly they conjectured what might be in store, but nevertheless had their hands on their pistol holsters for Glandelinians have n ever yet been known to have captured boy and girlscouts alive.

"You are the boy and girls cotts of this command or the raft?"he asked.

"Yes. "answered Dolores herself.

"Well, are there among you any persons known ad Dolores Mic-Holl ster Jennings, Angoline Richee, and Glady's Wenthworth and Joy St Claire."! "Yes we're all here except Angeline Richec." "Where is she!"

"Wellsir who are you and why do you want to know. Why the questions?" demanded Dolores. "We don't tell whereour friends areunless we know the preons who addresses you."

"Well Ladies and it the Contlement" answered the general and his sorious looks deeponed"You should probably know that I too ma a subject of Abbicannia, and that war is raging frufurious/y between Abbicannia and Glandelinia!"he glanced at everyone who confronted him.

"How do we know for sure. You may be Glandelinians in disguise admitted Dolores actining as spokeman"We cannot understand whether such is the case or not, for you may be Glandelinians in disguise. If you are we order you ove this raft is mediately or you'll be prisoners and what we'll do to you if your men boards here will be something terril e." "Sorry you misunderstand me"said the general. "I am general Herdrude, Francis Herdrude of Abbieannia. I'm no Glandelinian and it pains me to state that I have information here"indicating the wireless message. "Which if true makes the situation a very delicate one for some of general to continue.

"This message which if you don't believe me I'll even let you read, "Comes from some strange private individ al and of comes cannot be regarded by me as official. He claims to be one man who says he's the Original "Mutt" who caused those sot of funnies to be made in some For lagm papers. He states in this message, that some of you he doesn't mention any names except Dolores and Angeline Richee are very cl ver clever, dangerous and shrewd Glandelinian child scout spies operating as the girls mentioned. I know they're true to their cause, but hasays that there are two or three who doubles as Dolcres Angeline Richee and Gertrude Angeline for the sake of some dreaded accomplise of their's who is either original in apparance or diguises himself to look like Mutt, and has a leader known as some name I cannot prom pronounce here but who appears like "Jeff Jeff." If you here are the original ones then I'm sorry for themistake. But if not, then while I should dislike very much to do enything of the sort it will be my duty to hold you have as prisoners myself untill you can assure me you're not the ones that this message states of. It says a girl by the name of Dolores Mic-Hollester Jennings is an orginal v christian girl scout, but someone is doubling as her and I'm afraid you're the one. If you can prove you're the original then not only will I hop you can do so, but hope you'll understand the danger your facing by having a double in your comp."

"That's the Professional International Spies again"declared

Henry. "Oh the firing squad for those two!"

With a lock of wonder the general listened to Henry's outburst, and then turned to D 1 Dolores for explanation. It was indeed forthcoming without delay, the boys and girls realizing the strange blunder believed it better to be aba absolutely frank with their friend since it was general Herdrude and not a Glandelinian officer in disguise. Therefore they showed proov proofs who they were, and gave all the important features of their connection with the case, the adventures of Penrod with the strange spies, and every occurance taken Jum in their Duri s were laid before the general, together with thed commission papers, and other means of identification. As a final proof of the fact that they were not the duplicates, Dolores suggested that general Herdrude send an inquiry to general Vivian or to Angeline Jennings their main superior.

This the general did not consider necessary to do deckring that he was setisfied that though the warning was a tracone, it was therefore for their own good, and that the real duplicates were some

"It seems how wer "he usid"That this party who is duplicating you child secut officers may be the accomplishes of those Professional spies, and that they are determined to cause you trouble or hinder the work you are set out to do, and in my estimation there is butone thing you can do to protect t yourselves again t against those while you intend to do your work of capturing those six spies ." "What is that?"asked Glady's eagerly.

"Bring your girl and boyscurt.regiments away from general Viviens army for the time toing, and either operate independently or join

"Thank you general"Dolores replied after a short pause. "You have certainly treated us royally, and we should and willshow our utmost appreciation. We believe indeed that you mean well forour sake but it is a matter of the greatest importance, and we would like a little time in which to do consider the subject. Besides we'd have to consult our superiors on that subject especially Angeline Jennings my sister. She is our Matron scout. May we think it over !!!!

"Certainly"replied the general heartily. "You are right. Consider it well and remember that I shall h-lp you if I can . And general Hansonia Vivianias army is not for away."

"We really are aportion of the child scouts that readily belong to Francis Vivianannas army"spoke up Joy. "We wouldn't want to complicate matters at all, but if we are forced to we'll go back to his command." "True indeed"rejoined the general"but remember you have a bold and desperate and of spies to deal with, and they're liable to operate in any christian section they can to try andcutwit yourpurpose. Judging the two Professionals, by what I now know, and what they did to Penrod in order to make himexpose the hidingplace of Jennie Turner I believe they will not stop at nothing trifling or big. Remander that if Angeline Jennings brings her boy and girls cout troop to general Vivianias army you have the protection of that army as well as others."

"While I or my friends don't want to underrate the ability of your army"put in Glady's "I feel that these fellows are men of ability and cunning and they would attempt to frustrate us just the same no matter what army we came to . We were once in Concentinian Aronburgs army and those spies even there sure made 10 hot for us."

"But think cfoll the glory and honor that will be your some day for assisting the good country in her time of need. You are always reworded alri already, and God has blessed all your undertakings." "We always think of that too. "agreed Dolores.

"But also we must remember"put in Jane Mellfort that we are the boy and girlscouts called the "RA NGERS" and that the Vivian Girl Princesses would not with us to beputting ownselves into the section of an army where there are different regiments of child scouts than our own. You have the Vivianites. We're the Rangers."

"I shall say no more. "declared the general. "You have all your own idea, ideas and your will is yours. But you must remember it was better if you had remained at general Vivianannas Richee's army. That is the main army for only Rangers and hundreds and hundreds of them are there ye Vet."

"We should have but the Princessespushed us on."said Fred. Withprotestations of their gratitude, the boys and girlscouts went to their cwn quarters invitin g the general and his officers to remain on their raft to their comfort as long as they wiked without interfering with their duty. They themselves sought the seclusion of their cwn headquarters on the raft. They at once held a oconference to consider the weighty such subject which had just been presented.

All felt indeed the anticipated step wasone of great moment and that more than their own personal safty or inclination was involved. They knew too from what they had learned from many accuts and by telegraph that after having moved off fromengaging Myletze and leaving general Nero Viviania to watch Myletze general Viviananna Riches by the orders of the Calverinian government was concen trated some where near Abbieann. They studied the facts too that three or four ofthen besides Dolores, Gertrude a Angeline, and Angeline Richee were being duplicated. After reviewing the facts, and studying the subject by writing down everything that was said, which they always do to make it out better, Dolor s Dolores stood up, removed her speciacles and B& id;;;;;;;;;;;

"Officer comades comrades you are the ones to decide this matter. "suid Dolores. "Shall we do as the general sugge sts; or remain with the array under general Vivian by communication even if we go abroad after those messengers."

"There isn't such a thing as remaining with gener I general Vivians army if we have to go from onepoint to another "declared Glady's . "If we have to go forth to chase after those mies, we just naturally seem to belong to whatever army we might conscupon, and that is all there is to it."

"Sure"Spoke up Jack himself"But we can of our own accord choose any army we wish if we have to do it can't we. If there are other kinds of boy and girlscout. Regiments there we don't have to mix in with them do we. We can remain a seperate regiment in some other locality of the or army and not butt in where we are not wantedd? . ::"

"If we go back to general viviania Richees army, we could do all sorts of secuting round there and try to find out clues as to the causes of the disasters at the city won't we?"asked wildred Maxwell?

"Why certainly"satated Dolores with some impatience. "We can find out what was the disaster. "Eruptions" or explosions, and if they were caused by mines try to go forth and find out where the clues as to to formations of theunderground galleries for themines were located. Then we could come back and tell our friends, where their remains are and they'll then blame Glandelinia and say she was the one who did scatter sucha big devastation storn of ruin and floods all over the landscapes. That would bemore important than on chasing after the six spies wouldn't?"

"Well no one has been able to prove yet that Glandelinia was responsible, have they?"

"No. and the disaster has never harmed or made us orphans at any rate thanks be to God"put in Jack. "worone though I believe we'd better go shead as we are, and do as Miss Jennings wished. Our business is to either get the details of Abbieanns destruction or to try and intercept those six spy messengers, and prevent them if possible from seelingout theplans they have stolen. Where here as scouts anyhow and that is our only work. We do sometimes join battles but that is notour work."

"And I say we had better make clandelinia soon sue for pace peace even if we have to increase the war and fight in itomselves to get her to do it !"declared Dolores seriously. !!..::

A general augh laugh greted greeted this announcement. Dolores desire for peare even at the expense of a desperate fight was well known by every one . Indeed every one knew well her sense of fair play in war as well as her readiness to settle the war by conflict and by forcible means. Not for nothing was her hair (strange for Abbicannians)

When their laughing fit was over she continued; "Our main predicement is that some one is always playing one or so of us of our double. Some one maybe a scout of the enemy side, or midget men would be able through some clever way to impersonate me. Glady's or others. Th at is the mea main thing that we are up against. It was not so long ago when Penrod thought Gertrude Angeline was turning traitor and trying to bey betra/ him to the enemy. When he discovered the deseption he shot the impersonator dead. What are we to do about the matter. They don't seem to be around and if they are able to pull thro gh through with their work they'll throw everyone of us into confusion. Shall we go to Viviania Richee's army or shall we go along with general Vivians still. Shall it be "On to Abbieann" or stay with general Vivian?"

"Let's take a vote or ballot. "suggested Fred. "Of course there are about only ten of us here, so there may be a dead lock."

"Not much of a chance for a deadlock with t'n ten votes cast one way. "quickly put in Glady's. "I know how you and the others stand." Laughingly Dolcres handed a slip of paper to each one.

"Fach one of you now put your sentiments on the paper, and drop the al slip into this hat. "she directed."

"Who will count the vote"! Asked Joy St Claire.

"Evangelino St Claire will"said polores.

Only a few moments were required for the ten of them to prepare the ballets. A hat was then passed, and into it the h slips were first folded and then dropped. Evangeline St Claire at once thrust in her hand and drew forth a folded ballot ... ? """

d. - 132

"Number One ... """she announced. "Hear ye. Hear ye. The solemn word of Dolores, Chief girl leader of the Rangers. She says on this slip to head for Abbieann but to sent in the request first to either Angoline Richee or Angeline Jennings our two main superiors. Then this next one" sh she continued, reaching for another ballot has made apic ture of a po tato vine as her sentiments. That's surely some fine artist. That. picture almost makes w me wish I was back in the beautiful country."

"That's mine"declared Jane Malfort. "That's intended to be the branch ofa tree."

"Thanks"dryl y responded Evangeline, reaching for unother ballot. "This third one" she went. on "Has made a pisture of the Abbie annian flag." "I'll take that "Cried Mildred. "Abbasannia Frever."

"Noble sentiments for a Flemingo leader"was Evangelines comment. "Now this fourth one has made a picture of a bird of some, a kind. I can't tell exactly what it is intended to represent."

The others had hiw however made the same thing, and soaxfrien dly argument resulted in which it was left as a matter of doubt whether they had intended to draw apicture of the Bove of Peace, a Hawk, Falcon or the American Eagle or some other big bid. Much good natured chaffing resulted , but it was finally decided that either bird would serve as a vote of "On to Abbieann ... : .. !! :.

"Now Delores it's up to you to inform general Hindernine or Herdrude who ever he is that we are much obliged for his kindness, but we'll head for Abbieann.General Richee is our goal and the six

"All right .Here goes. Come along with me commades."

The general recieved the announcement of the boy and girl scout officers pleasantly and with some surprise though he was a thilly disappointed, and took occassion to compliment them on their loyalty to their armies and principals, declaring that at the same time that he would be glad to aid them in any way possible.

With much lighter hearts now they had made up their decision, and they all repaired to the western side of the raft boat of Gertrudes to watch for the approach of the regiments of child scouts. Some of them were gazing at the scenes beyond the ruined harbor of St Ethel dreds and g were greatly interested in noting the still smouldering fires. And far away they could still hear the roar of the battle of Hangar Run and wondering how it was turning out. Soon the wirst Company of the girlscouts came the girl troop being first at this juncture, and due to the friendly assistance of the general and his men, their blongings were speedily passed across the water to the raft, and soon the company on of girls were all on board.

Boats hauled the boxes of well needed ammunition to the raft, and they were taken from the boats and brought to a spot favorable for their purpose, and I all of the girlscouts worked while while the girlscoute leaders superintended the work of loaif loading and lucing. By midafternoon, they viewed w t with satisfaction the company of girlscouts. Soon another batch of them came and soon the remainder of the whole force was on shore waiting to get to the raft boat, while an interested crowd of refugees hovered near to watch.

All this time thwy wondered where were Gertrude, Angeline R c Richee

Jean and Penrod, and some others.

Just as Dolores announced everything ready, a motor boat drew up near their raft, discharging Angeline Jennings as its only passen ger. She was greeted with enthusiasm by all and asked to inspect their work.

"mys and Girls couts of AbbianisAbbieannia Thy some good or some unusualaws for you." announced the girlscout leader and Matron after proclaiming her astonishment at the results so spendily and unknowingly obtained."

"If it's good news all right. "Sad her sister. "If it's bad news we don' don't like to hear it. Good news is always welcome."

"It : is not bad news though its quite exciting. "said Ageline Angeline Jennings. "First general Vivien is giving the enemy a good ls lesson in the art of fighting. The Glandelinian array is falling back in disgrace. Next a strange launch passed us just a little while ago. Thatever it was evidently made good the in it down the waters. If we could get him we'd be lucky. The Mutt spy was in it."

"And what about the man!"asked Dolores agerly while the others xrowded around her to hear the news. "Did he land in god shpe and did he have his companion with him, or did he leave the boat and swing except with the man who drove the launch. The Spy left the vessel as they were passing the raft, and he swam ashere. He is no doubt on the enem enemy sde of the shore now."

"Then all of us had better lock out no? now"declared Jane melifo rt drawing her deepest breath. "The 'rascal is perhaps going to head for the six spies at once to warm warn them of our intention "

"According to the Officials"continued Angeline Jennings"he would if he got there even have a hard time to get into either army, as he has not been able to secure a pass for either. So if he is found therefore by either side he will be apprehended and required to explain his presence."

"That won't be any help to us at all I'm afraid. "Dolores ventured. "He is crafty enough to keep out of the way at least of the christian lines, and if he can't get in to the Glandelinian camps in that far direction he has some crafyy means tosend the word alone to his six cronies. I only hope he doesn't succeedin getting to Abbieann or to any other locality, before we find where he is. If we can 't caltar capture himwe'll at least kill him to save the nation from disaster at his hands. I know there's a tresendous reward for his cature dead or alive."""QA

"Now I must return to supertend the other work and of the moving of the tents so they can be brought on to the raft. "declared Angeline Jennings. "So far we have done all we could for the start and we'll have Masses and Novenas offered upforour success in the end exped ition. The only thing is that is delaying us, is the wait for Gertrude and the others. I heard they've come to camp, but have a nu a duplicate of Gertrudes cooped up somwhere but whre we do not know. Wht they won't do to him isplenty."

She saluted and then renetered the boat(not the goat.(() Turning their attention to the final adjustments of the work on board the raft, the boys and girls soon had everything completed. They were provisioned and prepared for a long and dan gerous trip. ?.

"What visthfirst move vto b done now A D. lores" Asked Fred stowing the last article implace. "Do you suppose those six Glandelinian mies will head for that most extensive battlefield."

"Poussibly we would be wise to tryout the movement of the raft a bot a bit to make sue overything is all right. "replied Jane Mellfort thoughtfully."Then if everythin g proves to be in good shape, we can ret rn and wait for the appearance of Gertrude and the others, and also try to learn what the other fellow did upon swim in g ashre:

In case he has not left the reason we will of course try to h get hold of him especially at som near spot, won't we!" inquired Jack. "I believe it would be n best to n nab him as soon as possible."

"Yes easy talking but not easy doing."said Joy.

A"and maybe he has already gotten to a place where he can hide the pl ns plans untill he finds a place to seel sell them to some chief Glandelinian general. "suggested Fred.

"All these Glandelinian spies are shrewd chaps all right"assented Mildred Maxwell"But hr is the most shrewd"and we cannot tellwhat he may attempt todo. I think we can find the boat thatput him ashee and induce theone who drove it to tell us where the Professional spy has gone."

"Unless he is a Glandelinian not even bribery will do it." said Jack himself. "Even if he is an Abbieannian he willnot tell us unless he roally knows the man is of a suspicious character. T^{n} on of cours ccur se hemight nab his himself and save us the work. Let's try out the raft and hurry back."

"Accordingly they got the whole thing in motion, and their engineers started the engines. After the first few puffs of the smoke stack, he touched the throttle and the huge raft began to move forward. Accelerating the speed of the engines, the raft moved down the big stream in a majostic manner. They all cheered as the raft began to move soswiftly. They however headed tward their own camp to be closer so as not todelay the rest and the removal of the camp.

"The river takes a bend near the camp"said Fred. Tets go around the bend. We sean get a pretty good view of the cumps that way, and do our best to help them in getting on board."

"I can get a good view of a big squadron of cavarly coming along the shore over th to the north."Dolores stated. "They're in purple but they're coming this way too. "she addedd !!! ...:

[&]quot;I am informed by som.couriers"replied the girl"That he was alone

It was as Dolores had said. A gaint column of cavarly inpurple, was rapidly approaching along the shore and but approaching tward or follow ing the raft.

"Let's give them a good race. "Nolures"Cried Fred excitedly.

"Sure" acquiesced Dolores.. "We'll show them that an engine can run faster than horses."

Accordingly the engineers were ordered to turn on full ower, and in a moment the raft was skinki skimming through the water at a great rate. "Good gon gosh they suremust have swift horses. "reported Jack.

"Why they're gaining."

"Gaining" ! Inquited Delores.

"You're right they are. "answered Mildred horseld. "They're even overhauling us. I didn't believe the christian cavarly have such swift

"Well let them come." Mildred suggested. "This is a trailtrip. But I never heard of horses gaining on the speed of an engine."

"How near is the caverly now!"asked Dolores.

"About one third of a mile behind down the share road I should judge "said Jane Mellfort.

"After a bit we'll try and mae it a mile." spiled the engineer. "At that instant from half a hundred of the cavarly men there came a rattling noise as of rifles being fired. Puffs of white maoke showed from the nearest of the gallopping horsemen, but in the wind and by the papeed of the horses quickly disappeared.

"They must have spotted enemies. "said Jack.

"It must be .They're shooting at something. "Said Evangel ine St

Dolores glanced at her companions and then at the horsemen. Again the rattling report of rifles were heard and other clouds of smoke and bullets struck on objects on the raft.

"Leaping Liz r Lizards."cried Jane Mellfort. "They're shouitng at us. Are they Glandelinians in purple uniforms. ""? ?"

"I have nothing to say to mine enemies. "Said Gerald Starring. "I've c come to frustrate your work in hindering those six spies."

"You may think you did."said Gertrude Angeline "But we'llprevent you if we can and willdo so if we have to kill byou to do it. Your outrages to the Vivian Girls so often, from you and your companions have never passedour notice and now we have you trapped just where we want you. It's too bad th my are not here to see you.

Starring wheeled upon Gertrude Angeline, and Angeline Richee."A "And all your dirtylittle devils in uniforms -- if they're not in the war what're they doing here!You girlcout she devils cannot do your work alone eh? What are allyour members doing here in the diabolical Christian camps. And you want three, helpers, a boy and two girls to help you cature orkill me eh Miss Gertrude Angeline!" The desperate Glandelin ianhoyacout did not want to parley, but in spite of his eagerness his judgement told his that he was in the most perilous situation in his life so far. He didn't fear the Wivian Girls when they had him often, but these girls before him. An evil spirit for nothing would fear them. And Penrod. He must tount them untill they lost their heads from black rage, that would give him an advantage to fight his way to freedom

"You Gertrude Angeline, went to make me seek peace with the Vivian Girl Princeeses I supp se you little christian devil. What do you know about me and thon, my affairs and their's "he continued. "You Penrod didn't get enough of exertences with the Professional Spins those days they almost had you . There's another adventure coming to you in a minute or two.Angoline Richee, if I'd been a girlscout also devil of your sort I'd have picked some men soldiers who could help you fight a hoy scout like me if I was afraid, instead;;

He got no further however, for at that very moment taking the initiative he sprang like a enraged little tiger. Glandelinian by scouts will hit a girl wooner than he will any boy when rn enraged when the girl happons to be an girls out enemy, and his fists dashed full into Angeline's face right and left altogother or almost togother with as great a force as he could bring to hear. The force of the blows flung her backwards, her head struck the edge of the stall behind her, and recleveing a kick from him into her stomen she dropped meaning to the flooor and lay there! .: LK

Passing her with a glosthing look, B Gerald Starring leaped for Jean, but the agile little girl eluded him, banging him in the mouthwith her fist and darted down the middle of the stable screening at him furiously and threatening totear his eyes out with her finger nails if he'd dare come closer. Before he could quite recover himself, Penrod and Gertrude Angeline with a furious shot and screen sorang from behind like wild tigress es to the counter attack. As Gerald swung sideways he saw a lon- g dangerous looking knife glesming in Gertrude right hand and the looks in her eyes was anythin g but . pleasant. Good as she was she was a little Rattler whon aroused. She was Radeliffes sister and had her ways He thrust her arm up, and the blow diverted glanced, the knife ripping his sleave open from wrist to shoulder. Penrod alsowith a ki n knife was spring from the other side demanding;

"Surrender you fool or I'll jab you in the side." But Gerald seizedupon the situation with judgement for which he would never afterwards account. F Dashing his fist upward, he caught Gertrude Angeline under the chin, forcing her head back and getting , a good tight t strangle hold so tight that her tongue protruded at the same time he grasped the wrist which held the long gleaning will and swung so as to interpose the girls couts body between himself and Penrods blow. As Penrod struck age in Gerald turned with a case cursa, shit ering himself behind Gortrude Angeline, one hand still encircling her throat in the strangle grip, the other holding back the wrist which she was struggling most vehemently to use so that Penrods short and stabbing strokes always fell short aimed around Gertrudes body. Backing into the stall adjacent to theone in which Angeline Richeo had fellen, Gerald in this manner continued to ward of f Penrods for ious attacks. The stall itself was narrow, and the enraged because it is unable to get pest Gertrude, stou struggling madly in Geralls green around her throat in order tostrike a blow from the side or room. So long as Gerald could retain a hol on hold on Gertrude and keep her in thisoosition he was compa ratively safe and this homest do as Penrod sure looked dangerous. But he had no more than about fifteen seconds in which to think out his next his next desperate move. It was all a question of muscular endurance both Gertrude and Penrod were equally as strong, he could not hope torotain his clutch on Gertrudes throat with one hand for many seconds, against the force behind the girlscouts shoulders he wasn't able to chock her hard enough to make her lose her breath even though her tongue was sticking out, and her strong body was too vory heavy. Suddenly the Grandariaian boyseout made up hismind made up his mind."

He sudfinly released Gertrude, flinging her backwards with all hisnight. Gertrude fell against Penrod, sending him stager inthe two clawed at each other, and fall to the floor.

, the two clawed at each denot, and that the saight of Jeans face As Gerald Starring released Gertrude he saught sight of Jeans face peering across Gertrudes shoulders. The fall of the three secuts left Jean, Geralds only immediate foe. For a second Gerald Starring hesitated he hesitated to attack a giri or boy much inferior in size and strength. But at that moment he saw Jeans right arm drawn back, and the gleam of the very knife she hold. Before the upward thrust came he stepped back with an oath pulled the revolver from his pock et and brought the butt erashing down on the little girls head. The little girl, instantly drenehed with blood, from the jagged scalp wound, hurled the knife at him just barely missing, screamed and fled, stumbling from side to side with handsupriased above her head, tward the door. Blinded by the blood that poured over her face she blundered intoone of the window cab rasures, and her upraised hands brought down the lighted lamp which fell crashing upon the wooden floor, and fortunately for them all went out. Still screaming, Jean found the door, and tried to push back the bolt, but Gerald Starring was on the spot before she sould do so. He struck her q a resounding slap on the side of the face, pushed the bolt back himself, and taking Jean by the shoulders though she raged and struggled and pushed her with all his strength into the o ppposite shanty. The room however was empty. However the word had evil ently been p passed about that it would be advisable forone to make onesself scarce in view of what was going on in the hig stable. But a group of girl and boyscouts were gathered about the dooor at the entrance peering in, and the sudden apparation of poor little Jean, covered with blood and Gerald behind her proved toostrong for their discretion.

They came running forward yelling brandishing their sabres. Gerald could have broken through them and gained the safty of the open grounds beyond a short distance away. Even the strange hazards of such a course was less than what he had faced in the stable. But the idean ever occured to him. He was fighting mad, possessed as if with a devil he had come disguised with thepurpose to enter the christian lines to fight the chief leadsers of the child scouts, and he meant to fight the war quarrel out. He turned. He heard Gertrude Angeline and Penrod running acrosss the stable floor. All his calculations which were not very consc ious were made in fractional seconds that very morning. So now he calculated that the pair would reach the door in about a half second before the men in the shan ty and outside. They would ermorge con i confident basgining him to be in flight before the crowd of girl and hoyscouts. He waited. Jeans blundering flight which took her into the midst of the boy and girlscouts stopped them in their attack, just as Gorald had colculated it would, at the same moment Penrods head and shoulders because visible around the door. Gerald was waiting patiently forthat, and he jabbedupward most vigi vigoriously with his right. Penrod howled and fell backwards. knocking Gertrade Angelino off her balance in turn as she scremed. and before they had recovered from the surprise, Gerald had stepped back into the atable and bolted the door behind him' Her saw their wonder and the dawn n danw dawning wild fury and defiance in Penrods face, covered with blood, and Gertrudes infur iated pout, but they came on at him again, scaftily now, crouching their knives drawn back for the jab. A revolver even when loaded is of little use against a knife, woilded by an expert at close quarters/ And he was fighting with two vivious. The girl and boy were attack ing from opposite sides too, and they watched each movement that Gerald made. He estimated that they would spring after a very brief delay, and to allow a close encounter of the two this time without some ruse would be absolutely fatal. Gertrude's face was white. her eyes glared dangerously she seemedpossessed. He hazarded a second and then stooping pickedup a broken board which in the first encounter had fallen to the floor from one of the wooden boxes. He weeled tward Penrod, who twisted his body to meet him, and then as Gertrude with a scream rushed in from n behind, wheeled again and brought down the boar upon her head with such force as to smash the board in to splinters so rotten it was. However Gertrude rell reeled, andonee again Gerald leaped and caught her by the throat. But this time he was not quick enough to repeat his former manoevre. She had managed to jab him in the eye with her fist as he started chocking her, and Penrod struck at him from the left side. The upward thrust, would have pentrated the heart of the Glandelinian boyscout had it struckwhere Penrod inten ded, but by a miracle of luck it passed between Geralds arm and his body only just grazing a rib. The point of the blade eaught in the linings of his coat and before Penrod could withdraw his arm, Gerald pressed his own left arm against his body eatthing Penrods hand there and holding it like a visc. This movement swung him around foreing him to release Gertrude and the ensueing bovine rush with the girlscout made threw them both against the embrasure of the second window on the opposite door side of the door. Hen themselves were yellingoutside and a furious harm ring was being maintained but none of the fighters was conscious either of the shouts or of the blows. As Gerald and Penrod fell against the window shelf, the rotted wood broke inward , the shad such fell down breaking the glass, the second lamp tottered and then crashed down beside them going out as the first had done and leaving the stable in co. complete darknesss.

With a stift movement Gerald managed to draw Penrods are fruther through his. With thepressure of his combined biceps and triceps he could hold it there for good and all if he had only Penrod to cons contend with. But he could not find means to use his right hand to force Penrods open and grasp the knife, which the boyscout was making frantia frantic efforts to use. He needed his right hand for Gortrude, and PEn Penrod had managed to twist the knife so that its edge was against Geralds side and with the sm chiows of his fingers he was scraping it backwards and forwards ripping open the coat lining and inflicting a succession of scratches and little pic puncturus under the heart. Gerald bucked suddenly and violently jerring Penrods spine against the edge of the window so shelf. Penrod groaned and made a frantic effort to twist hisself free hacking at Goralds chins, and shouting to Gertrude to finish the jobs Gertrudes forward rush had flung her between the two-Gerald felt her grouping in the the darkness trying to gauge theoseition in which she was leaning Gerbrude was ovidentlypuzzled by the position of the two, and by the termination of Penrods shoulder against Geralds-Gerald sensed that Gerbrude had finally satisfied herself and had raised her right arm to strike callingout "Surrender" He flung away the revolver which he still held, reached up and soized the hand as it was shout to dessend. Thus holding the right wrists of each of his desperate little assailants, he purposely plunged forward bringing them to the floor with a crash that shouk the barn from end to end.

He then let go suddenly, and s ranf to his fet. Gertrudes knife grazed the sole of his foot, as Penrod tried to rise Gerald caught him beneath the chin with the other foot. Penrod grouned and his head went back on the floor. That left only Gertrude in action. Gerald withdrew a step or two. He heard the desperate girlscout breathing heavily as she eroughed in the darkness. Then for the first time he began to be able to hear the loud knocking on the dor. It also sounded now as if a crowbar were being applied. Then as the yells of the soldiers came to his ears, the absurdity of hisposition did not down upon him, nor the fact that when he had nottled with Gertrude he would have to reckon with the mod mob outside. He meant to deal with Gertrude as he had with the others. But in the darkness he could only guide himself by Gertrudes breathing which seemed to come now near his left side, and then on the right. Further away Penrod was half crying andmouning. Out of the darkness but silently this time Gertrude leaped forward. The knife blow flashed past Gerald, who got Gertrude by the arms. They began to wrestle as if they were two tough hoys. Here was Gertrudes superiority though she had no force in her blows if she did strike with her fists, her physicial strength was greater, and gradually the s strongth of Gertrudes powerful little arms began to tell. The two panted straining together, but Gertrude was winning, and the knife arm was slowly slippingout of Geralds elutch . It reached upward. But at the moment when it was evading him, Gerald dropped Gertrudes left hand, and struck her a swift blow between the eyes. As he did so he heard the breathing on the other side of him. Gertrude staggored and sereawed, and in a flash Gerald had both his hands upon her right wrist kneeding the veins and so sinews untill the fist open ed-The knife elattered upon the floor, and Gerald stooped and seized it. That was the precise instant when the knife that had been dro ped by Angeline Richee, woilded by Jean Saunders, and it was a systery how she got in, and thrusted upward found its home beneath Geralds shoulder, while q a blow from Angeline Riches who had come to again and with her fist felled corald to the floor, and he laid there.

"Well we've got the crazy little fool at last"panted Gertrude recovering hor knife".

"He would strike at little girls with his fists, "declared Angelino. "That's why we then resorted to our knivos. "declared d Jean. "But I hope we haven't really killed him, though it serves him right He would resist, and ho being strong we had tofight forour own selves or go under at his hands You know how Glandelinian boyscouts are. They're worse then the soldiers."

Radeliffe in his own tent stretchedout his legs upon a chair, and was drinking his soffee, while Bors Bora leaned against the wall near to where Jolly Joan and Annie Roomy were standing, and listened to the superiors semi-silioquy.

"Yes girls we'll soon he on the rip n ow trip now"Radeliffe was saying. "We'll get through the Abbieann territory for good, but we will have towait hereuntill Gertrude and the rest comes, and then we'll beat it after those six accomplises of the those Mutt and Jeff spies. Sure indeed I'll be glad to see something dome. We all so far have put up a good fight against the enemy. And we girl and boyscouts have stood for things which no mortal nan ought to be made to stand for because of the enemy. I've soon battles keep raging for six weeks at a time without any abatement, and I went through lots of horrors and did not say anything. I've seen the enemy win andlose. We have stood all we're going to from the enemy. I've lost t eight thousand little girl and boy scout friends in this fool bloody game, and Gertrudo and me will have to star t organizing another round regiment of girls and boys when we finish our Abbiennn expedition and maybe we won't hear anything about it either. But nevertheless when it is a case of being forced to see so many of your friends perish, just because the enemy boyscouts can't mind their own business when weours lyes don't bother with them or rub our noses in their business, I've finished and we're at war now with them too, and I've come to the end of my patience. You understand me girls. We fight the enemy boy and girlscouts too. "So that's about all. We all go forth on the ruft townrow. And if you hear that the heads of any of the Glandelinian generals have been cracked because they thought they were George Washint Wah Washington's and Robert E Lees, and Napoleons, and Dikes of Wallingtons and thelike don't you blame me for it because they can keep out of truble. They're the biggest fools of all that earry on a war for a government that is falling and don't know it or want to know it. Even the whole world is going to leave Glandelinia to her fate "continued Raddliffe sipping some were coffees for he was finishing his dinner" It's her feult. Glandelin is will get her head busted, and she deserves to get it busted."

"I guess I shouldn't have told Gertrude about the doubles trying to pretend they're her and spy around the camps"he said"But I was so piping mad I just wanted that Glandelinian boyscout Gerald Sterrin g to run up against trouble.Mt Maybe I shouldn't have for she'll almost kill him.But let himgo.He's a spy, and it'll be a lesson to him. I wouldn't reise my finger to help him sgainst my own comrades if his darn fool head was being bustedopen right here before my eyes. You w know what I mean!"

"Yes" said Joan, and the word conveyed any significense that its hearer might choose to put upon it. "Yes" she continued thoughtfully, though what she w's was thinking about was incomprehensible.

"It ain't right that we hoy and girlscouts should have to go through this "Radcliffe persued." I'm a good scout, I got my troops to think about, and I'm against all Glandelinia does, and the way she carries on the war. It ain't reasonable to force men in the army and then to force them butcher little kids is it Roomey!"

"I should say not "answ-red Annie Roomey deckiedly. "That's why we girls became scouts. We children have to fight forour verylines."

"You're right said Radeliffs. "Of course all of us kids have to fight forour lives. "She filled her cup full of coffee and sipped it. "I don't know what in the world is wrong with the coffee this noon time"Radcliffe said, as she drank the cup empty. He put his legs down.

"I guess Gertrude and her followers ought to be in camp by now"He said."If xh she discovers that enemy hoyscout in the camp she'll be breaking his head if it is breakable for posing as ohe."

"You bet she will. "said Joan.

"T guess I'll take a walk up the road, and see if she and her officials are returning." he said

Radeliffes walk was a rapid one.As soon as he left the payer he raced his horse up the hill tward a cliff.As he reached the summit he heard the sound of galloping horses in the distance, and presently he saw a party of girlscouts coming tward him and two of them were Camp Fire Girls.He halted his horse, and heiled thems.

"Say girls do you mind gi coming with me to Gertrudes head quarters?"he called.

The column stopped, and Radoliffe percieved Jean Andrews at the lead.

"Yes we don't mind"she answered. "I'm glad that we met. We need you we're scouting round to find why Gertrude and others don't come back. The whole camp is worried about her. "

Redeliffe rode with them. They urged on their horses and then Jean Andrewsen id:

"General Vivians army is gettin g worsted now, and general Kindernine is gone to help him. But where is Gertrude. She and those who were with her has not returned since they went out this morning morji morning."

"I don't know"said Radoliffe.But I hardly an worried."
"Why.!"

"B'cause Gertrude is able to take care of herself."

"They sure an't be shooting at us, they cught to know us by our uniforms." profested Jane Mellfort vigoriously. "Maybe its a mistake on their mart or they may be Glandelinians disgused as cevarly 4 solders ofter adde."

"Mistake or not I know the sing of bullets by this time, and if those were not bullets that just passed across the raft, I'll give up. Everybody had gone to cover. If they're encomies in disguise we'll return the figs. They're exposed and we are not. "

"Wetch out"shouted Dolores peering throughs pair of binoculars she had hurriedly seized. "They're really Angelin ians all right, and they surely are making some mist k mistaked. If they were of the others we'd rout them in a hurry to cover. They're aiming at us again. Warn others ofour scouts not teanswer their fire."

Again the peculiar sounds as of the sharp cracking of loud rifles greeted the ears of everyone on boatd board the raft. Dolores involunterily ducked her head as she heard something sing close past her. She knew they were Angalinians for Glandelinians in 'disquise would carry no fleg at all, and these troupers carried both the Abbiennian Standard and the National flag besides a number of wall known Angalin ian cavarly stroughers.

"P orhpas we had better slow up the rait a bit, Dolores and see what these Angolinians want." suggested Mildred Maxwell anxiously. "This is a warm reception from your best friends I must say. I wonder if they slowlys do make mistakes when they see new comers. Christian soldiers firing on kids. They must not be able to see straight. I have a mind to enswer their fire enyway and treat them for treasion."

"No I don't believe its wise tode so. They cannot tell our sizes at this distance I'm sure. "said polores.

The Engineer was ordered tominatement the spend of his engines. "Let's remain out in themiddle of the stream and if they wish to see us they'll come across and exclain themselves. We won't goshore ward. Let's try that an d see Dolores."

"Pick out a good spot where the stream is deeper and more wider and we'll stop there, but we'll not raise any white flag."

"Here's a good one on us."doclared fack. "We didn't hoist our flag. Maybe that is the reason they're suspicious of ws."

"Here's a good spot"the engineer amounced. "We can slack down in that wide at a stretch over there. We're then in view of a part of our camp and if the paralle coated soldions are enemies our comrades over there will come to our assistance. There's a batch of the watching the accomment of the raft in that field by the hern with the alate roof. See by that large clump of trees."

"Indeed I do. But do you n ctice how the farm houses are set close together. How neat the country looks from this position. Different than when we traveled on the flood."

"Don't try to get our attention off the chaps in the purple unifor's a'ill following us on horse along shore like that comrades. "Dolores protested. "If they do shoot again I'll get some and enswer their fire no matter who they are Hoist our flag and see what the result is."

This order was cheyed, and evidently the leader of the tro pers divined their intertion of moving twend the center of the stream, for more than ever of their numbers rep reopened fire, but when the flag went up the firing suddenly stopped, their was exclusionations exong those on shore, but nevertheless they centre used on and deployed along shore as if supplied of a trick. In a short time the engineer had brought the reft to the center of the stream close beside within view of the fermiouses in Alestad by one of the scales. The troopers was still following along shore but now in a long thin line in stead of in groups, evidently in an effort to cover the whole reft should any trick be attempted by those on board. The leader did not seem to shore one timed a pretty hot fire, keeping for some of those on shore con timed a pretty hot fire, keeping those on board the raft

"They are firing anyway"said Jack. "Shall we answer. "
"Wait and see first. Maybe their officer is half blind and cannot see the flag or either they're anomies in discutice."

Directly the raft had reached the center of the stream, the raft was stopped and the column of troopers sent up a slowel askin g for those on board the raft to surrander. Then from the opposite shore two boats, accompanied by along load moved tward the raft and or they rapidly closer.

"What uniform are the those wearing in the hoats?"questioned Deleres.
"I don't knowposeibly but they seem red. Possibly they're see of cur own comrades?"

9-126.

As the three boats came nearer they discovered they were some of their own and they were helped on board. Dolores then gave a good look at the leader of the troopes on shore. Dolores gave a start. The leader though inpurple was a tall slender man on horseback, with a sort of long nose, short mustache, and had quick shifty appearants of the hands, and had small boudy black eyes. Dolores tapped Jack who was nearest her excitedly on the arm.

"They're enemies in disguise or I'll est my hat"she said.

"How is that. They're flying our flags."

"Rither they are, whether they're carrying our flags or not, or maybe they're true christian soldiers and being hoodwinked by the one who seems to be le their leader." "Are you positively sure."

"I'v got his number."

"You're trying to give me the jim jess Dolores."

"No I'm not. That's the "Mutt"spy or I'm a Dutchman and not a girl scout. Look at his chopped off chin, and peaked m ose."

"He looks remarkably like the pictures Radeliffe gave us. "said Jook looking through his own fieldpiocos, and he looked startled in deed."I wonder if it is really he. I'll bet he's told the soldiers he'r s with that wo're Glandelin ian child scouts in disguise just to idn der ourpurpose." "I don't believe it"said Mildred. "You can't fool Angelinian soldiers one bit(she told the truth. I'll) I'll bet you polores they're all Glandelinians in disguise."

"I'm If it is so wa'll soon find out."declared Dolores. "James bring me the big loud tones magaphone."

The boy obeyed and then clearing her throat the girlsout called out as loudly as she could scream through the horn."

"Well old Mutt, how's Glandelinia, Where your little fishy faced fallow Jeff."

Accustomed as he evidently was to surprises of all sorts the suddeness of this question startled the man under discussion and made the other soldiers start in surprise and look at him. He gave q a quick start and glanced keenly tward the raft. Dolores by hor field glasses could see a flush p overspread his face.

"The Glandelinian armies licked general Hanson "fine "at Lebanon didn't they. "continued Delores screaning as loudly as she could in an aggravating tone of voice. "I didn't think an Irish man could be licked by a christian general did you!"

Evidently recovering himself with an effort the men did not deign to reply to Dolores remarks. Maybe he couldn't be cause the distance was too great. In stead he directed his conversation toons of his officers evidently endravoring to convince that general of somethin g. Apparently he was having a very hard this of to in g so and the officer seemed suspicious.

"They're Angelin Angelinians all right"said Minnie Sounders. "See the officers won't believe a word he says. We can easily hear what they say if we string up this wirl wireless. IgTl1 act as a sort of Reido."

This was done and they easily heard the conversation.

They heard this from the epy"I tell you they're Glandel in lans on board of the raft."

The officer spoke again.;

"You're pardon sir, but I shall have to ask you to as excuse my doubts. The one i on the raft who spoke through the magaphone didn't talk like Glandelinians. In fact she seemed delighted over general Hanson whipping the Glandalin ion army at Labanon. You must have been trying to fool us to bring them into trouble for your own ends. I am an officer of the Angelinian cavarly, and shall ' have to ask you to produce papers to prove and exclain their presence here if they're not Gla christian child scouts as you say."

"Your 're doubts somms to be unusual all right"answered the mon speaking slowly. "But I tell you they're are Glandelin ian girl and boy scouts for I have h one a paper stating they were goin o to seize the raft before the force under Gertrude got there. I am telling you the truth sir and if they're really the true on es on heard then my mistake for they may have gotten should of the would be thickes. You kn ow sir I'm impersonating that Mutt man to try and cause his exposure. If they're the true on as why don't they come forth. They know we have no boats."

"There's a mistake there some where "said Delegee. "I'll let them come abound but I'll not draw the raft shoreard. shoreward.

This was done on d the mn men were aboard. At close warters now the "Mutt"didn't seem to have the exact resemblance of the real per sonalty. He was too thin , for that man and parts of his makeup was missing. The officer spuke to the girlscouts and he smiled pleasantly as he said:

"Your pardon, children but I shall have to ask you to esxuse my firing upon you. I am general Cranier of the Abbieanhian caverly and shall have to ask you to show your papers that proves you're the original boy and girlscouts on board this raft and explain your presence on it durin g the absence of Angelinia Aronburg. This man here secured a paper, sayin g that some boy by the name of Gerald Starring has secretly brought into camp a large number of boy and girlscouts of the enemy, and planned to seize this raft shead of the real orginal christian scouts. If you can prove our mistake we regret firing on

"We pardon you for yoursistake"answered D 1 Doloros speaking slowly and in a low tone. "We arethe original ones and are set out to secure if possible six accomplices of the Mutt and Jeff spies. Here they are. Our papers will prove it to you. Will you please to exemine them?" she continued drawin g forth a ducument from her innerpocket. All the others followed example."

In a manner that impressed the boys and girls very favorably the officer examined some of the papers comparing the description s giving them therein with sthe ones stending before him. Evidently he was not entisfied. He then said;

"Couldn't go by passports. Glandelin ian girls couts or boys don't and truthfully never knew you by name and may go by their own. I've a list of all of the names ofour own boy and girlscouts here and to make sure will have to call the roll. If you answer to these names I'll thank God they you're the origin al an d got ahead of the little bandits."

The roll call was put through. Turning to his companion the officer spoke a few wordsin low tones whereupon the other turned and made for the boat. As he departed the officer said/;

"I'm sorry to have made you this trouble, but I had this report from him that an equal number of enemi enemy scouts were going to seize this raft before you got it. You came on it on time. I believe is is a wise move for all of you to make this raft appear deserted and to leave it apparently float down tward shore as if it was not in occupation and was drifting with the river. I shall too have to place you under strong guard for the time, while I go for assistance and orders. You will by this ruse have a chance to capture the lot of them. This will be a redress for our mistake. You will not object to this plan. They'll believe the raft is described. Let them all get on, and then they'll be caught red handed. You do not object to th at plan do you!"

"Certainly not" Teplied Dolores but with surprise and alarm at the prospects of what night have happened. "But we sure will need your he p."

We will do everything we can to help you child scouts to capture the lot. But remember it'll be hard to sa establish their idon tity for they'll come in your own uniforms. But they'll come probably in a more cautious way. But I wi wish to ask? "he con tinued" "Do you gi those Glandelin ian girlscouts and boys too kn ow your sign als an d passwords."

"Absolu ely n o"truthfully answered Dolores.

"Then no matter what uniforms they're in you can nab them easily. That is on on of their set backs."

"But I wish to ask. "continued Dolores" Why it is that that man says he's dressed as the Mutt Spy. Isn't he the original!"

"He certainly ain't smiled the officer. "That mun is not an ywhere around here. He's just his du-duplicate. He's doing that to frustrate him. He's been in the arm for a long time and got the make up two days ago from studying that fellows pictures."

"They say the original is in the christian lines somewhere"declare ed Jane."I wish we got could hold of him before any one not knowing him lets him get sway."

"Why do you want to catch him. Is he one of those who goes in the "Mutt and Jeff Shoes." orshows?" asked the officer in surprise.

"No.Because he is kn own to be a den gerous spy who would do it to try and get us into trouble with any n ation, and it isourpurpose or the purpose of anyone to arrest him and have him extradited."

A look of great autonishment came over the officers for. face. "How did you get the information!"

"We didn't get any information"declared Jack. "We hadour experien cas with him."

"I believe I remember him. "said the off c officer. "Yesterday he sent me a information that Gertrude Angeline was a Glan delin lan spy. That didn't fool me as I've known her a long thee."

"Ah ha just as I thought. "declared Mildred Maxwell with some heat. "However" continued theofficer, "I shall have his duplicate here remain on board your raft untill I return . I sh ll leave him on guard for you. He told me he knows the actions of the would be socuts and can easily warn you. ".

"Good"said Dolores. "We generally cal call the Mutt Spy the "Rat. "His compation we call Flahy face."

Evidently pleased at his solution of a difficult problem the officer turn ed to his compani n companion who had been standing by the railing of the huge raft. Addressing his rapidly the general evidently outlined hisplan for the girls and boys saw a crafty look of satisfaction appear on the mans face. He eyed the child scouts however with friendly greetin ga.

"I shall be compelled to warn you children. "announced the officer stepping forward. those enemy child scouts are dangerous, and therefore be sure to have them fully by surprise when you have them all abourd the raft. They '11 fight fleroely if they're on their guard and you'll suffer heavy loss. This man himself says Glandelinian child scouts are as fierce as 1 lttle fiem ds."

"We'll be on our guard." said polores.

"Now if you please"said the officer to the spy man who was beper sonating the "Mutt" fellow will you step into one of the cabins so convenient. I or they desire to have you be on guard armed with your good repeating pistols and I will return with my cavarly and superior officer as quickly as I can to get the Glundelin lon child scouts whom you and the children here capture. Thank you "he added as the soldier stepped tward the cabin in obedience to his request.

Thenthe officer went back twend the boat and said to those on hoard the raft.:

Remember keep yourselves hidden, and await me with me tience. I shall shall not be gone long."

"Here's hoping that Mutt spy fells falls and breaks his neck."growled Fred kicking a post. "What a retten situation this is unyhow. Gartrude isn't here, nor is Angeline Riches or others. May e Maybe she's gone or to be gone out scouting the full day breause of that old bettle near Hangar Run. I wish the enemy fighting us there would be swallowed p up into the earth. It would serve those Glandelinian s right ." "Wonder what's the idea nunyhow?"Mused Hans."I'll bet those Mutt and Jeff fellows seems to have all Glandelinian generals absolutely hypnutized."

And we'll have to have the idea od just policing a place to frustrate all his rotten schemes I suppose "Henry answered with en attempt at cheerfulness." I Hope the offi cer with return soon with a good force, for we may need their help if the Glandelinian boy and girlscouts do come and show fight when surprised."

"And while we 'll have that trouble and while we're delayed by waiting for Gertrude I suppose "Mr Mutt"s spies will be on their way further northwest by that thee." protested Doloros with an in jured

"M aybe they'll come and suspect we're here and shoot us up o little before trying to board"said Jame Mellfort."

"If they go and do that Dolores flashed "We will show them we can lay at the same game. We're all armed with automatic pistols and rifoes rifles."

"Where do you think the Glandelin ien boy and girlscouts will come from?"asked Violet Jane incredulously.

"From the emposite shore"replied Dolores. "We can't mistake it because all we haven't on board are the leaders we're weiting for and those these bringing the tents. The brains officer told us how to become. He's a bright chap that fellow. Follow his advice and you won't go wrong."

"Wonder what's the chance of getting out of this territory if we are hard pressed." Joy St Claire ventured. "This stream looks to be too small to go through in much of a hurry on d I'm hankering the Glandelini n child a scouts may bring a troops of soldiers with them to make sure they won't fail in their securing this raft." "We sught to be able to get through by the main river. "Dolores mig gested.

"I don't believe it "Jame Me, Melfort replied thoughtfully. "This river is good and large in itself but in someplaces it may be shallow, and if we ever got stuck we'd be stuck to stay and we couldn't burst through unless we had deeper water."

"Let's pren pretend we're all in dan ger, and then what would we do. "Laughed Minnie. "Set a big bunch of Glandelinians after us in boats and I'll wager we'd be out of the dan ger zone in two hours."

"I' going toendeavor to get the chances to spot those energy child scouts before they arive, and to get the cars of one of their 1 leaders and make highave apleasant 1 cok when I got through with him." Jack ennounced suddenly. "I have an idea that their beaitufl h white souls might by som chance be chan ged if we had them prisoners long enough."

"I'm going on dack and see if they're coming. "said Glady's. "Don't do it advised N'ed. "You're worth too much to expose yourself should they be coming and they'd see you. And they're not worth westing our own lead on."

"But we've got to get going sometime."protested Joy imp atien thy. "Do we sit around here all night. ! What's happened to Gertrule and the others. Why don't they come??!"

"It isn't night ye y yet by a long ways"Argued Fred"Keep your temper Joy we're comin out on top all right. We're not down yet. You know when Gertrude gons out, she goes out to st y stay a long lon g time."

"I'd like to know what you'd call it"Joy answered, somewhat aggrieved because the situation was not to her liking. If the the enemy child scouts were to dome for this raft supported by a stron g body of soldiers and that officer was late with the rest of his caverly force they'd have us here fast and we'd all be prisoners." "Listen "commanded Dolores , holding up a warning hand." That in the world is that!"

"That"oried George Zimmerson must be the Glandelin ien boyscouts coming now to get the raft."

"Not much "declared a boy called Harry who stood near the cabin window. "It sounds like the droning of some sort of a whirlwind. If this window ween't so small I could see without going onto the deck." "Ask Gertrude to en rage the window. "suggested Fred. "Let me

However the noise grew more distinct and presently the droning sound eppeared to be directly overhead. As the boyscout Harry had sad, the noise was as stronge as if a torn ado would have been approaching but none was in eight in fact torneo ternadors do not occur here. Evidently searthing strange was amisess and was approaching the raft."

"Tet's get the raft going mick"protested Bolores, ""This is dreadful. This is fierce."

"Thit a minute"can lioned Dolores"We are not the kind torum away fro from anything." "Sure"said Jack. "We will know soon enough what it is soon enough! $111.6# "inyhow it is getting unusually hot."declared Tred."I can also smell smoke and a wind is rising, matever it is homoming it is coming pretty fast. "Nothing is the matter with your nose mai "maintain ed Jack, "Only its stubbed and free cled on d wr n wrin kles when you loss your temper

"Yes"agreed Fredrick with a lugh" and it has always out a nufectly fo good smaller inside. That's more than than you little folks can "Wonder shot our friend Mr Matt is doing wherever he is right now!" put to the boy adout H acry. "We haven 't heard such about him unfull we I can to recieve this strange news."

"He may be in ceneral "topleys lines by now"said Dulores. "Wall wind a telephone call o to him and ask him for a drink 273 + 25 W - 1 Witer."

"Maybe he wouldn't pay bar one ion all change five as Gameline to drink, and add tramite powder with it."

"I'll try and shoot him from here then. Then that 'll fatch him and make h be surrender."

"Dolores you're rackless as Jane. "Lough a / lough d loughed Jone Anderws, kn cwing full well that Delores could not consider such an impossible experiment. Pe"Perhaps we'll find out in a short the who what is going on."

"Yes I think so agreed Delores. "T can smell alot of smoke though. It is a getting stronger. I'll het there's susething on fire near bers."

At this a general laugh went up. The boys and girl a found 1'. than a impossible to resist Dolores 's drell humor in even trying and exciting moments. Many times had Dulores held courage in their hearts by her const n constant comments on trivial trivialties. Directly the boys and girls heard the loud classor of something now like far distant firing.

"I wonder what the enemy isunto now "Queri ed Harry trades t for vain ly tolock from the cabin window. "Sounds as if genrul Vivian is getting worsted. And I'll bat those Glandelinian child scouts got wise to us an d are not posing of "

"I'll bet that is what is hoppening. "Replied Jack. "Gen eral Cannonia is proving general Vivians match."

"It cannot bepossible "Protested Dolores vigoriously. "The firing sounds in another location ." "Why"Protested Joan as she sniffed the air"I smell something like wood and leaves and grass burning." "Listen "commanded Harry raising a hand for attention.

All districtly heard a stronge roaning prockling noise justout side the craft but shor eward.

"Boys and girls the forest on the opposit a shore is on fire." shouted Dolores.

All the others who heard this gave a log of notonighment correlativ some of the boy and miriscout leaders. 11... Rush ing tward a window they attempted again to secure a view of their surroundings. Driven hefve a gust of wind that was threat threatening to rise into a terrific wale a immense volume of smoke entered, causin e those who had son e back to the windows to step back chocking.

"The stream is tooshallow andour raft is in danger. "shouted Dulores to her followers. "There'll be no than for those memy child scouts to be oming here. Everybody on d. deck."

Jack himself racer too the engine ruom.

h"Can you thawlget the raft to go tward the widest part of the stream Engineer James !"asked the lad noticin g tha t not far away such a terrific well of flame was annoraching that it looked as if the world itself wa was burning up."

"Guess it's too shallow. "returned the engl nner engineer eveing the wide section of the stream sort of applicatively spect carefully.

"You have todo it"said Jack commandingly. "It's shallow myhe but its better to be aground than to perish in the fire. The stream is too narrow in widt, here and the fire will reach it. It seems to onme from the direction of Lebanon confound it. what happened there I wonder. "! "Woll las I'll try it, but I don't believe I'll make it."

Accordingly the en wineer started the raft handing in that direction while n ow as many as were n eeded of the scouts got busy tocover the raft with some of convers that would not burn in case face brands were carried acrosss the streem..... The engineer compared to make the arread, while the boys with the paddles stogged read;.

"Took out for the enemy however, "coution d the loyscout Harry anxiously. "Glandelin about mostly would be a market and a large and and "Yes .. a out for even the Claudel in lan boy and girlemouts, "out In Jack"It would be justlike them to be somewhere else probably on the other side where there's no fire and open fire on us as soon as we are so seen on board the raft."

'I'll see that an eye is keptout for them. "Minnie herself unswered. "And if they do show themselves on theorypusite shoe or Snywhere else we're soing todayote a few minut a minutes to usin " sous of our own artillery on them. They' surely need to learn of us."

Ned and Harty s Hary stood by to give the engineer diections and to lend anypossible assistance in their endeavor to cen the rest leave the shallow part of the river and get into the wider. Glouds of smoke as ifthey were from q a store and as thick began to drift past the raft/ and the crackling and bassing roar of the flames grew loudly momentarily.

"Look at the fire quee. "Graped Joy excitedly. "And see how the strees are waving. There's a fire hurricane also on."

"And that's some clouds of smoke too. "declared one of the boys whose name was Jirwie Driver coughing as he applied one of his long paddles s"and I'll het whatever cause that forest fire to oueap here never meant even the very country to survive the flames. This is the worst ever. Wish this river had been created mucy much wider."

"Are you ready engineer James" Asked Dolores as she came up to the sabin of the engines.

Then us the engineer nonnonnoded his reply polores said to Jack

"Scoot around in front and raise the enchor, and see that we are not flanked by the fire just as quickly as you can. If that fire overtukes us before we get to the wider part of the stresm none of us will last long, and it sure is getting hot already. Look at the temper ature on that thing. T30 already. Phew. Hurry.

"gure anythin g." to escape this Purgatory"put in the Engineer" "non't any of you stop to fight the a fadvance of the landelin ian boy and girl scouts untill we get out of range of this foest fire forest fire"declared another. "Then if a fight comes on our officers will referee the bount bout."

No one seemed to reply to this auggestion, but all of them shut their i w jaws in a man manner that was familiar wity all kinds of boy and mirlacouts. Their officers knew that the how and mirlacouts wild do their best to bring the rest out of such a dangerous mituation."

The fire was comine fest and was only a mile away. They didn' T have much more time to lose. The engineers fast attempt was to make the raft force shead but somethingmust have been wrong some where for he met with defeat that was he youd question. Without Without doubt the raft seemed to have been jammed by comething on the hottom to permit it to pass with any degree of ease and the engine seemed to puff its itself to death without any remit. result. Supported by his two helpers the engineer gave a hurried backward clance and shook his head doubtfully and then turned again to the task at hand. It would be a tight aqueeze but he was more than determined he was desperate. The fire was comin g at a race hurse speed and would not give them much time and they all would surely be enveloped as the stream here was noton e quarter of a mile wide. All of the boys with the poles and paddles tried to help the en gineer, and Jack thrusting in onel ong pole attempted to push on hard as he could but he slipped and the pole went high into the eir producing such a splash of water that he and nearly everyone on board nearest him wot a shower of mud and water. Had he not been a rood how he might have said a had wor do but he had all he could nevertheless to control his temper. Finally only with the greatest degree of difficulty did the lad memore after all to get the pole into the hottom of the stream as he wanted it, but push as herd as hemicht as he wight he found it impossible to make it hides on inch-Evide ntly something below seemed to hold the raft for it could not be negotiated.

"It's no use"gasned Jack.

"Come book then Jack. "called polores in fear. "she was covered with mud and water he had accidentally thrown all of over here "But why give up" spanted the lad almost splashing her again. "We don't want you to get caught if that part of the raft if it is ant to get afire. "she called. "If we can 't budge the raft we'll all make for the o sposite shore.

But Jack was determined to get the raft going shead and he struggled andly with the pole.

"Never mind come on back to this end of the raft Jack, "we will find some other way. "cried Fred.

"By this time the maoke swirling acrosss the stream had filled the eyes of all the boys who were doing the paddling and the push ing on the poles. With every breath they drew in great draughts of smake and great heat laden air untill they were n e nearly chocking and their lunes rousted . Reluctantly Jack had to admit def a defeat and endeavored to return from that end of the raft. The Engineer was still having the engine doing its utmost, t but that segged far from ears, though th seemed to shart the raft a little. Just he Just was about to try oncembre to push with thepole a w screaming squall of hot winds fanning the bure wall of fin on fire on the shore deshed a huge rolling cloud of flesse tword the the lad and many others. They were no close to this part of the reft figure the southeast that they could not escape this southing enslaught no matter how fast they ran. Jack in trying to getout of the way met with Dolores none too gently and in the headon collision badly lacerated his left ear and caused a lump to furm on her forehead. No one however were on time however to escape the loss of their symbrows and a pair t part of their hair.

"Don't try that again any of you." advised Dolores rubbing her bumped head."It won't do. "

"Much obliged I'm sure for one"Courbed Jack. "You are right."

"How about making the engine going b " backwards." fellows"sug gested Dolores.

"This was tried but to no avail.

"Do you su no suppose we foculd fight off the fire from the maft ifthe conflagration happens to cross the stream!"usked Jack. "It may not to as farce as it looks when it tries to cross."

"Nover can tell till we have the experience. "hopefully sooke up Fred. "What shall we use to fight off the fire. We failed to take any thing from our camp that we fight fires with, andthe others have not get returned with the camp equanage."

"We have plenty of buckets on board."

"Use those "Dolores advised, as Jack was wiping the blood from his injured our. "Get as many buckets as you can."

"Guess not this time. "said Jack doubtfully, and rejecting the suggest ion. "We have even failed to bring a mingle bucket shoard except the olear er ones we use for drinkingpurposes."

"If the day was lighter we could see batter what we are doing." cried the boy scout callilad Ned ... : !!!! .! "Have any of you got your electric searchlight with you in your pockets in."

A quick canvass of the groups showed that non a of the hoys and girls had the desired a "ticlesss". All had been left within the camp. (scamp the lamp)

"We have topull the raft loose then. "declared Dolores. "We are lost ifwe don't . We only have a minute now to make it or periah. """OA "Pull out your posts there "ade advised Jack handing a mistold and Jacket lack to a boyscout called Jimie. "All of us work like mad and get hold of them. That willy enable us to get the raft loose. It must be stuck."

"I'm going to turn in a Four wleven"ann anded Dolores, adjusting the strap of her holster over her head, and drawin g her automatic from its place. Maybe our friends will hear the firing and do some thing tosave us from this situation."

"Shoot straight up Dolores" Cautioned Jack.

"All right Mr moss"replied the girlscout pointing the weapon tward the sky and pressing the trigger . !!: : !M

"book at the awful fire coming over there." she added, directing hehe attention of her comrades tward the southwest shore.

"The forest are burning through. "gasped Jack excitedly. "We have herdly to chance to save the raft."

"And it won't be long before the fire comes up and overwhelms us." added George."

Dolores pressed the trigger again, and again,, and still again,, in the hope that the sounds of their shots would reach friendly sars and procure their rivrelesse from the sand bar.""

The wind had ruse to a terrific gale by now, and fire brands and blazi blazing I eves and even long pendant moss was being carried acrosss the stream by the storm, while the whole river was covered with smake. And the cracking of the flames grow much flowder as the fire appeal and a searing blaze started rouring from the concesite shore.... All of the boy and girlscouts were tho ghing and thoking from the smoke withey were compelled to inhale. To avoid so much stoke and terrific heat they went in to the cabins and other shelters of the raft.

"The raft is moving now, the engineer finally worked it off"Yelled the how acout callled Jumie (shumis) in delight, as the other were preparing to find means to attempt an on slaught on fire brands nend biszing pubbish on the raft in spite of the dangerous con ditions."It is moving slow but we'll get out of it now."

His shout had been called forth by the raft suddonly breaking into the u much desired for motion. Soringing quickly tword the door he called out in spite of the heat;

"Hurry up there Mr Engineer. That's right. Pull us off the her. We're chocking smothquing and being resated by the frat heat."

A few in unintelligible works came to the boyscout and o the others in reply-mirectly the raft was removed from the bar it began to stoom shoed with great repidity, but as if urged on by a greater effort in its mad attrapt to destroy the boy and girlscouts and their raft, the forest fire blazad up with redo blad fury and sood on with in d. increasing speed. The entire forest on both sides of the stream burst out in such a flame as if to make the world appear to turn ito into a molten planet no doubt augmented by the sudden rush of the winds of the hot hurricane which was blowing down the river. The forests on all sides within view was doomed.

The engine pulled the raft so fast that it finglly burst through the walls of flame trying to reach acrosss the stroom, and nearly ran down a large number of boy and girlscouts in boats who were coming down the stream from the other direction with the affort toescane the flames too.

When they were at a safe distance Angeline Jennin s J ennin gs said; "We are much obliged to you sure for trying to run us down. They all got on board even while the raft was still going and then Dolores shouted to the Engineer

"Renew the speed of the engine. We have to nown away from the forest fire or we'll be hemmed in presently."

Then they saw in a lone boat beckoning to them an old man trembling with excitement and fear. And his my peculiar custom excited their confecusity at once. He was dressed in a loose fitting kacket that fell outside barry trousers his bare feet thrust in old sadal sandal alippors with long white heir falling down over his shoulders and he presented a sight the boy and girlscouts wouldlong remember. In spite of the urging of some of the child: scouts the a man refused to get on the raft, all the time mushling to himself.

"What is he saying"inquired Minnie, as she has grasped the boat by a ans of her hoat houk and was detaining the old man.

"Listen" commanded Bolores . Then eddressing the eld man; "What did yo you say sir. what are you doing out here in the stream!"she shouted.

"Dolores.Dolores." cautioned Angeline Jennings. "Mayle he isn't

"Sure enough agreed Dolores in a self condemnatory tone"I forgotl; and tried to shout at him because he deen 't samm to understen d our language. He must be English."

"That is he stying!"age in asked polores, drawing n carer. "I'l us' him"said Jack. Then addressing the old men;

"what did you say mir. ! What did you want to come to the raft for! What do you want here!"

"I'm lost.K'T'm lost." repeated the old man in English. "Oh it's the base you went. "triumphen the recoonded Jack. "Then indicating nolores he said;

"This is our girlscout leader. She understands a little English sel sek her!"

But the poor old man only shook his head, and tried again to avoid the reft for fear i' would ran his boot.

"I'll bet I know what he winte"Gried Jack: "He may believe we're reiders, that we might have stelen his cow or other eninal and is It is king for the even in the heat of this fire. Here Mister is this it?" and the lad omitted a long and very dignified Moo-oc-co-oc. A so t sort of smile everps oversproud the aged figures as the man shock his head vigoriously.

The boysecut Ned clanced at Jack with a twinkle in his eye. Catching Ned's unusual clonce the led turned easy with a very wed face and mumbled;

"We're not Glandelinian relders. We're Christians of Abbicannic Your property sin't here. You need not believe we have it. We only haveour borses. You needn't suspect us."

"That's a coodone Jack"Dolores laughed. "Bue he isn't looking for animals and he surely doesn't look like a farler or a factor." "Well then that is a good joke on me all right"admitted Jack very sheepishly.

Taking the old gentleman by the arm Dolores or d Angoline Jen nings menaged to get him onto the reft. In a short time the worst of the forest fire had post passed by, and silm 1/ scrping the old nor mit wordning the destruction of the formats near his own locality.

"MEAL where each the Ginet Heire hay true chilecouse that were do nown to try and depture this reft!" sked Fred modelling them 121 to the present. "It we could only not held of them I'd worm that it skets."

"Bon't know I'm sure. Traplied Dalores. "Entle they must have get word from some source we were on hourd and absorged their aind one syle the fire on one one up suddenly and frustrated their effort."

Jenny linkings revo a gasp-murning to Jack in as oning of the crid; "Bolores or Jack to you 'wo don't suppose that those boy and cirl secuts of the energy might have so up this forest fire with thepurpose to covershelm us. I don't bolieve it."

"Say"put in Mack"fou' e wong. "I heard of a forest fire raning yesterday near helanch and coming this way. If it wasn't so hard to believe that would be the most rescensible solution of the whole matter."

"Wonder what in the world is the watter with Gentrude Angeline Richee and the others." suggested Harry. "Suppose some of our so out scouting and see if they're returning."

"We can see in the direction of the forestlesspart of the shore very easily where we leftour chaps." so spoke up a boy called Mike. Suppose we ask the old boy have if he would like to have one dinner. He looks hungry."

"Why not!"laughed Dolores.

"He gurerwest healest's get the men something to get, and then we'll get some one twooms us who understands Emplish end have blow there sek the old fellow if he noticed which way Gertrude Angeline and her followers left. He must have seen them.....""

"All right get Ge r Georgie to so shedd end nek him."
"Awe shucks"sputtered Georg Guargia. "for know I can 't balk Fnglish:

"Go on Jack yourself, may Polly You to him, anyway. "Threshed wivien Compor."

"Pully Voc yourself if you want to "answered Jack notewhat sulkily:
"I've made a fool of wheelf once, and that's enough Besides"ha add of
I want to so and sit somebody toward this blood and dirt off my ear."

"That's right Jack, we nearly forcet you and your little collision with me."said Dolores."We curbt to have thought before we neglected you like the lafter your travelected to make the raft wo."

"Approaching the old man one of the boys who was found who could spack a little English and who was still becoming the loss of his property; the log first indicated to the man by sions asking him whether he was burnery, but the man only shock his head "No. Jack hisself had come to boths his bleeding ask.

Filled with enthusiess at the prosp of of his venture to speak a little Enrish, the boy tapped the same aboulder, and then said; "Are ze hungly."?

The man still didn't mean to understand and the boy counted to the mean mouth, and describing a circle with his heads be in dicabed a plate hand with, and then pat of his a condition of forth worse effective. These instanting comprehending the man soiled and should his head in a manner to say yes, and the mean was brought to the Gubin and something given to his.

"I mi wish we could be no der way now." and d Deloree. "I don't believe me need to well for Gertrudes naturn. She and her a manuface may have more ufer away by this time." Each they intended to me close and for the source of it said nothing to us."

"We'd better head for Abbienn too."Edvised Anceline Tennings. "Let's overbeal the old reff fist and account the fire did it any danger."

They did so and found nothing injured.

"Hello, what's this tied to a brick!"cried Henry in as onishment.

"Whit's the matter?"

"It'l coke as if some Glandelin ian boy or sinterout left us a sort of forewell note."

"Not them kind." or nod June who seem up at Stade shout. "That's an All Ermien logsout mean me. Matte of his panething a or at ut Gentrude."

"Gortrude may be able to take care of tereots in more wastened Join Andrews. "Rut if that Storeine boy who it is easid she corn and met's the upwar band he'll kill here!" a deprendance a senter."

"I beend ease than thout her heading cornered one of the Glandelinian beyoncute from one of the caldiocally Is Rodalisse, "But I enceed the words all talk."

"It is not idle tolk-ghe and othersknew that some Glandelin lan bouncouste by the never of Fredrick to vien. General Hanson too had r ' ridden with can Jannia murgar and told her googha at first did not believe himthinking he may have been dreaming it. But the clay were formed before either the St Ethaldreds or Labonon bottles took place. Only it had not been settled how , when or where. General Hunson told Jennie Turner, and when she was finally convinced she told Viclet, and her sisters but they in turn thought she was joking. But then Violet, and her sisters learned of it through one of their coying avoloits, and one of the Prin cesses told Jennia Tumer to telegraph a warning to Gertrude Angeline and told who the real con unireters were. A t first Gertrade could not believe her exestent when she got the telegram. She then came to me. "There will be none I'll accure you"said Jean Androws.,.."But Jennie Turser, and even the Vivi n Vivien Girl Princeres under stands now what the whole situation is The wirl and boy souts are in greater per li from the enemy than they ever were or probably ever will be. Che and har sisters and the Vivien Girls knows the churaters of all Glandslinian boy and riclescute especially Gerald Starring, and his two Con federates, endthe avil mind of all t their followers.and they have learned (o tunnelly before it is too interes:

Not another word was smoken/. The party on hors back descended the hill and rode twand the hos and riminous on a which many of those still there were now broaking preparative for boarding the raft. An the party crossed the rickety bridge they heard the far off sound of distant lattle probably the action ragin g at Hangars Run. At their approach there rathered the entire population of the boy and miriscouts who had resained, resticulating and chattering.

They fall back in the greatest dimany as Radeliffe dimanuated from his horse, en assisted the two girlscouts down. They were wondering what had brought them so suddenly to the camp when it was being broken um to be placed on the raft. Olga and the others followed. Radoliffe tried to urge the miclacouts to r remain on their horses, but they aid no attention to "him." They then listened with the most in tense anxiousnessness as Radoliffa addressed the crowd of child scouts , theirlips compressed. All eyes were fixed on Redeliffe without winging. They however did not know where Gertrude had cone, but some of them po n pointed tward the Mars Hatt, where she and her boy scout leader had been lest to be seen as they entered after the escap ing Glandelinian boy soout leader. Redeliffe burried through the door way the girlacout or Comp Fire of Girle immediately behind him. A large n umber of the child souts dissered about the Mess Hell door , and several want with some hesitation inside. T's Mess Hall th is though lit by an oil lamp was empty save a few later comers who were still esting, and also the dark harm barns near by also seemed to be elenty, as at leget seen through the open ob purity.

Redeliffs muchling a separation to behavel smatched down the lump and carried it heatily twend the stable door. He raise it high and then looked in, then turned and tried to her the Cour wise wirls from entering. But they ushed not him, and Olga and, cried and wrung her hands and ray in to them iddle space between the rows of stable themselves.

Redeliffs following the ministroute new them serted upon the floor. and Penrod and Gerbrude too covered with blood lyin matretchedout and motionless. Oles took Gertrudes head on her landeredd Sterring though he too may have been wounded by Jean, was no where in sight. He had escaped.Olga ben t over both Gertrude and Penrod and Radeliffe never forgot the look of and anguish in her eyes or the tension of the white face. It was eviden t that through some ruce after haing woun ded Starring had injured them both and escaped. Jeun was no where to be found. Evidently he had carried her off. Still supporting Gertrudes hend she hapun tearing long strips of off her Bandages which she took from her mess kit, doing it frontically as if she hard whomay what she was doing. Radoliffe again mattering something tobine olf set the lampdown on the floor and kneeling by her, raised Penrod himself very gently muttering and shoking his head, whileh is face was as white as Olmas and as terrified. There seemed to be no him g that Redoliffe could do for either. Penrodeclothing and of that of Gertrudes was so de drenched with blood that it was almost impose this to findout where their wounds were. There were their bruines about their mouths and faces as if their wenquisher after stabling, striking or sleahing had kinked then both. The other girlscout found Angeline Richee still unconscious and with two terrible black and blue marks on her face. Radeliffe bull turned both Gertrude and Penrod and then uttered on exclaveration, and pointed to Gertrudes shoulder, and Penrods side near the ribs from which fresh blood was still slowly welling. Redoliffs to his relief saw that bothwere still alive, but they breathed very faittly faintly, though their facen had the color of death more bloudless than those of their res u resource. Redoliffe attenting to Gentrade first began outting owny the cost then the liming, which would not come with it, then the woist. He' 1cokedup.

"Bring some water Jean"(to Jean Andrews)

Jenn married out, the apprehencive mirl and hoyacouts outside heing in penic as they realized what had happened. He called to them, but they didn't hear, but as Jean stood smore than asking for a apail of water one of the girls brought a pail as full as nosable without spilling it. As she reen tored the shed the 'r groud of child accuts slowly gathered around the shed, noto it of curiousity but of dread of what had hoppened in side, with with looks of fury on their faces. Jean took the tacket hurrying into the statle. Radeliffe took a trip of the bandage dipped it in the pail and began to clean the wound pursing her tipsend shekin a her hand the while. The other wirls attended to Penrod and Angelina piches. Radeliffs could see that Gertrudes wound while not long was terribly deep and it was still bleeding. It was impossible to do more than clean it properly owing for the need of hasts. Having done this Radeliffs made a pud on deleged it inquestion, while Jeen Andrews working with stoody fingers which mus thelle to her from become to wind the strips over it round the mest. All the while the worked here and Redaliffes faces were epitated, and yet composed, and only the tortured eyes betrayed what they were suffering, but when the wounds of all three w re were bound Radoliffe "himself"broke down.

"I'm afraid it u is my fault. "he oried sobbined schbing as if in dec despoir.. "I warned her not to which with that Gereld Sterving und she wouldn't hear me thinking three halpers would get the heat of him. He could lick a score of us in a closed born like this. I know this secure was in the camp long before and I would not believe it. If thes Garald Starring has killed her and Pearod I'll get him even if I have to die in the Glandelinian camps as an assassin for it."

Jean An draws noticed and accurately that even in "his "should ment "he "held Gertrudes body obtainless loss be should disturb the minore unconscious wirl whose head he held, and whose life seemed to be slower slowly flickerin g away. The raddened deep wire girls did not find word to unever him. Prosently Redeliffe on they rode on slowly heard Joan Andrews sobbing herself. low broken sobs the take sould not for her own life chank for a long than Som thing the took her eyes from the road to lock for a moment in to Gentrudes face, and once she stormed the anlawands for a moment.

"How are they!" she asked.

It was agreed that this would be the proper thing todo, and two of them turned on the small switch of their fleshlichts. Housetons faraway, trees, and the 'u outlines of dist nt landscapes were revealed in the glare of the far distant files. By its reflection too the boy and girlscouts saw that they were still a considerable distance from the dreaded battle line. No place for shelter appared in case they dauddonly find themselvesunder fire.

"I see the river again. "announced Francis. "Don't get ourselves wet."

"Guess we'll have to right about face or swing around and go through one of those passes"suggested Harry himself. "I can't makeout any other vacant spot for a short cut. Is that a good idea. "?

"Good idea. "said "ildred. "I'll handle the searchlight."

"And I'llpull them down"volunteered the bo Ibmie, seizing his long reaching snippers as he spoke. "T'll give the Glandelinians lety plenty of excitement if they want it."

In dier the skilful handling the wires were brought downend the remainder of the boy and cirlscouts gracefully came into the len e and though they were fired on they were not jarred by the sudden storm of bullets, and and not oven their horses were hit. Ether the Glandelinians were not abring right in the durkness or they were firms up in to the air. Some of the Glandelinians orms closeup on hors back and almost cornered the child accuts, and in the firing that enmand the leader of the Glandelinians waskilled and two of the other officers more mortally woundedend ten of them of the privates killed and four teen wounded and not aloss on the other side. the lad himself said-

"Har--har, just like a bullhead."

The two others managed to get the pail off. "So-o-o-o you dirty little christian dog. You're here by that window are ye. Up to your old crazy christian don tricks chi"

"How did you guess it Colonel? Ten you're a smart old scoot. Try and catch me if you can."

"I'll show you you little devil.Go the both of you men and have every en a of our soldier got into the house by every window and door and don't dare come back without that little Lattlemake." shouted the Colonel in his excitement and rage.

However the lad hadpulled up from the floor a wide loose plank and this he suddenly claced onto the Colonels head and slipd down in it circus fashion to the ground, and before the men could do anything to inc intercept the lad he was off down the meadow as fast as he could run.

"id he get away Tolon el"criedons of the soldiers.

Winut up to Dumb hells.Get down here let the man on horse and cet after the little field. St. T. field. GW. HEI."

In a few minutes the soldiers about ten of them were on their horses and racing madly in the direction he had come with the colonel in the leed.

"What did he do you you on colonel?" askedone of the limitements. "N averaind what the little devil did to me, just hit itup and keep c your eyes peeled for the little guttersnip".

For a time it second as if the Clandelin iams would main on him so Jimmis whipped out his pistol and fired. A man realed in his saddle and fell-3e fired again and another fell de fired a third time and the 'clonels har so sank to the ground. The Glandelinians then returned the fire and the horse the boy rode sank to the ground. Just then whom the flundelinians were gaining on him the boy came across two country kids, two little girls one with black hair and the other

"ay girls will you give me a lift with your little speed wagen and the strong little pony you have. Those Glandelin iun fiends are het on my trial and my horse is shot and I'm all tuckered cut. I wish to regain my comrades and I'll direct the way."

You bet we will "ir Forscout" said the little dark haired girl. Hop in soldier boy."

The boy object sitting between the two girls and soon they were going as fastas the pony would allow.

suppose they shoot at us. cried one of the girls.

hey cans t hit us said the boy. of they do till pop them. I shot down two already before they dissounted me."

For a time even such a small pony held the page with the Glandelin ians left pretty far behind but finally the little pony became tired out but just reached the meadow in time and rushed in among their com his comrades who had repulsed the assulants.

Tearing a trop the Glendal in ians halted and waited for the remainder of their con contades. Fowever the exciting a cise and the famin g had attracted a large force of christian soldiers of the reserves and they wereup to the snot in a moment the Hadelin same surely

The party of how and wirlescente set off it a brick trot in common : with the troopers, and were soon first strain before the deck of .. some officers inside of the big tall signal station than had first easy at the distance. A white haired and whiskered Golonel con from ted them. And indeed a quick clan: ast the kindly expression in his eyes and on his face told the boys and girls what this man really was and that yet all enemies of little 1 little children would fare 1117 at his hands. Dolores at the code suggestion of Angeline Jennings decided to fully confide to the officer, and to tall him the object of their visit. Immediately upon ariving the officer who had decommended them confered with his equal officer in rank in a low tone, and untah ing closely the boys and cirlscouts were readily convinced, that his report was about the miralmy sirlycout and other leaders. At length the elderly colonal first made an antry in a book, exemined a small map, and then addressed the child scouts. His menner was dignified, wet conciliatory.

"Wery much to my recret children of the army, I have to inform you that, although your reports seem to be perfectly proper, there is lodged with the army department of general officers a complaint complaint that three or four duplicates of Gertrudo Angeline ere here seeking information either about us or of your hands that would haput to improper use and be a danger to the nation, and it might be possible by that cause we might have a prisoner among us who might be the original Gertrude Angeline. That might be why she didn't show un."

"In other words" Jane Melffort put in, as the colon el pagade-"The duplicates are suspected, and perhaps accused as being here as spice, and that it'll be hard to find out the origin at Angelin in Aronturg."

"I don't like to use just that term." returned the Colonel, and then added"Put after all ha name matters very little. Besides anyhow if you girls and boys could despite dismisss r'a recognize the original one then you're lucky. We can't tell head or tails between the prisoners as they're wins in the tuisness though they appear by the tone of their voices to be boys in dismiss."

Thrown into surprised confusion by thounusual and undignified interpution of their efforts and deliberations, the Georg Fire Girl efficers who had received the "Little Namere" were apparently unable to give coherent the thought at once to the matter in hand. They were called to a consideration of the case by Angelina Januaine.

The "imignite bow and obligation volunteered to accompany policies band trak to the raft, and in their company they left the camp of the Camp Time cirls. They had not sooner came twend the wait when they got the surprise of their lives. Owing to the scarcity of soldiers of any kind in this neighborhood due to the distant hattle thing making they had been commelled for safty sake for fearing of meeting with the energy to walk to their proposed destination some distance cut of their usual way.

The incident came often I cloves had conducted her followers and the three Telephone action of the country where without her knowledge every indication hatekened it to be of a degree as locality. In the meantime three strange Glandelinian beyscouts had been in this noighborhood, and they had seen the christian boy and mirl scouts, and their ditrust was not lessened as to what would happen when they observed the character of the very city at this section where many christian boy and girlscoats would be in hiding on the out look for any enomies who might cass that way, one of the Glandelinian boyscouts whose name was Francicus apologized for the location but stated that it was the heat available hidingolace from the christian enemies at that late morning low hour. It was he said to his companions too late to go elsewhere and he hoped the christian child scouts who were approaching would not see them. They went into an abandoned house to avoid being some Scarcely had they entered themlace when summone entered the mlace and apparently not noticing them engaged in conversation with another who had followed him. One of the Glandelinian boyaccuts whose neme also was Jack was keenly alert of his surroundings, and noticed that the new comer seemed to be indicating in a guarded way the three Glandel bring he secuts seated at a table apprently playing cards. "I'll hed bot he whiseered to his companions that we'll be sur rised when we dare leave this place. We have the advantage now as togethe up here would mean an unequal conflict and they know it. That how acoust looks suspictous to me."

The boys stole surreptitions elemens at the bouscout indicated and all erroed with Jack that he was evidently a lit ruled christian house ut of some sort planning to have them captured as soon as they left the place, or to surround the place and force them to surrounder. They were rould to war or that nothing in the way of attempted capture bould be attempted inside themiscs. Contr contrery to their expectations the place was not being surrounded by no one at all numewor a Glandelinian hovecout by the name of Thento Hardware clanced from the window and espired the suspected boyscout stantingersile avidently reithing for them to appear upon the street. He had gradually drawn hack out of sight. For perhans a block or so in coing twend the open scuntry the four horsecuts walked together in a close group distance ing the possibility of an attack and the host mans toward it off should it be made. Then suddenly their ettention was oftential by s sound as of a Cat Moowing somewhere. An answering stemal sounding like the cry of a cat when you stop on its foot or toll at once same from across the street. At that account a number of dislocants on horseback dashed up from the rear. As this column of title helited h their horses a number of hows sprang from two doorways. Other forms were seen approaching on the run. The hoys were surprised by the culdeners of the movement, and were hardly prepred to rectat so strong a force. In the gloom of the street they could not manage the number of their assailants. They tried to keep close together homing there h thereboy therefore to better withstand the accoult. A boy colled N ad abot down two of the hors and three wirls killing them all, Tr a Prank struck out brayely with hispistol butt landing a straight ford forceful blow against another girls jaw breaking it, and killing another who appeared directly before him. Apparently after all a reidupon them wes not the chief of the assault. Though they killed ton of the boy and girlscoate and wounded thirteen of them mortally, they were final?" discreed, Frenk and Ned weekilled, and the two others were discreted and soized in rough arms while dexterious hands gound ropes about their area and eleths about their frees affectually present in - an cutory. Their ams were securely pinioned. At a low croken occurrend from a wirl leader the child scouts lifted the new belplass bors into a writing army maron which at once darhed midly along the poor ty paved street, the horses mains at full I callon when Isshed by the driver who wis a soldier. True le se that ni de the two bors were unable to release themselves from their bords. Not a word was groken he their centers during the wild wide, and at length the prisoners mura over their urseless efforts. Tirectly the waron was turned in to a smoother street, but the speed was in ac wise divinished. It length the horses alowed dorr, and them they came to a standatill at the command of the driver, branged from their places like so your speke of crain the centimes falt th unalyes hoisted to the very choulders of their abductors. without the loss of time in explanation s the soldiers loaded the five boys into one of their boats bringing the canwa wholes wearly to the waters edge. A rattle of rifle shots greated the tiny crafts as they nulledout of the shdow of the rudged Oroban Home. A number of christian coldiers dimly outlined stood shove them sending shots efter shots in their direction, but apparently with poor sime. The clandelinian soldiers in the other boat returned the fire and brough every one of them down. Them dushing to the edge of the shore stood a hovecout and he too sent forth shot afor ofter shot. Highly becaused one of the glandelinian boyscouts swang his automatic around and fired. A scream erhoed through the gloom.

This last inciden t happened just as Angeline Jennians and her party came up. They saw the enceping hoats, a saw the boy fell, and deshing tward the river they opened fire in a fuscillade, killing and wounding a number of the hostman but the remainder not away. At once Anceline Jannings hesitated . A short perley was held in which it was decided not to bother with the Glandel triens in the bost but to continue on their course to the raft, where they would be with the root and have a report made of the incident. Accordingly they urged forward their hornes and were surprised to come upon Radeliffe, and the others who had the wounded girlscout leaders with them ...:

"Torvheavens sake what're waiting for oried Angeline Jennings. "Get them on the raft. What in the world has happened to them. I and we've wone through all this looking for them."

After twenty minutes had passed all were saftly abound the raft. The three wounded child scout leaders were placed in their respective eshins, but Redoliffe drew Gertrude to her own cabin and ergiched there supporting the head and the upper part of her body . Put Radeliffo who was ever watchful uttered a low cry. A little blood was leaking through the handage. She has He hastened to the other side of the bed and began adjusting it, while Dies herself the Comm Fire cirl who had also come on hourd had come cut side emain and turned tward the threatening growds of how and cirl scouts which for a moment before had been looking on in panisky silence broken only by low words andmutterings.

It was general Mylatze who brought his armies up here with the purpose to frustrate our intentions to bein wholet and her sisters to learn the details of the Abbienny disaster." There was a sensation at the Comp wire Lirls words. An excit ad habite broke out. Radeliffe who had fust completed the bandardar same out of the orbin on hearing Olyas's mords. He turned to the grown of how and eirlacouts. "Yes that Gerald Starring left them lie there to blood to depth. to die efter his attack upon them. I know when they way went intothe horn where he was they at first had not contemplated any attack on him"he said in scorn. "But when a crazy fool like that strikes a mirl in the face with his fists and fells her to the floor I don't blame them for denoting their knives. "I'd like to see a Glandelinian soldier away strike me with his fists. I' It was too had none of us were around. These Glandelinian child socits comes to forget that pledge they made. "Have it wour own way I basis "profiled one of the others. "We are core interested in the movements of the six Gland-linian sides anomy. The question is where have they one, and how can we continue the exadition after them when Gertrude and three others of our tenders are wounded. That's the main thing to dealde now."

"Believe wa" insisted Holores. "The next chapter for those six Glandelinien spics will be entitled "Beating it for Abbleom and it'll start in sudden and as mighty swift. He's probably going as fast as one of the other spics when we chanced during the battle of "ster Storring."

His chum laughed as they recalled that strange incident. To the benificant benifit of their new comers they described the equating incident which from so many other incidents immersable there is no rows in this book-Directly some of the boy and girlscouts were delighted to observe the of the more familiar part of the shore-The a parach of their raft booker was halted by

"Then too you haven't been bothered by any strangers nor Glandelinious since we left." entured Angeline Jennings drawing the raft mearers to the shore. "I suppose too it's sort of lonely out here in the street."

"No Glandel in ians have been here buy, except those who sent off as

"The prisoners we sent!" questioned Angeline Jennings wonderingly.
"Thy sir you sure are mistaken. We have no prisoners and did not sent a may ashore. I don't quite understand you whatdo you man!"

"Why you are sent prisoners sure you did, ten of them." insisted the man. "One of them had important maps in his possession and a diagram or something of your raft, and the number of names of all yo boy and girlscouts. They had been as to captured with a couple of boys from boats as they tried to land."

Angeline turned a puzzled look to her followers now grouped about.
"What sort of appearing chaps were they?"quickly inquired her sister polores advancing.

"Quickly the man began a short description which they all recognized as the ones whom they had fired on when they got away in the boats but not one of them was anyone of their acquaintance.

"Jame and her Comp wire inls trapped them, "gasped Jirale himself in hewildernessts "Thy I thought they had on easy chance to get away." the lad insisted vigoriously. Now you tell me "We"captured them and sent them to the christian lines!"

"Maybe you didn't look closely enough to see who the contors were Mr guard."put in polores."But we didn't send anybody.We didn't contare no pricesers."

"Pardon, but one of the girls had from you an order stating that she was to scort than through and into the christian lines, and that she returned with certain papers." insisted the guard. "Ty companion further down the road has the papers and the mps map I mentioned."

"Call him over here. "requested Delires. "I want to see that." while waiting for the approach of the other ward,, none of the boy and girls outs engaged in earnest sony mastion, with the others of the boy and girlscouts over the strange discovery..... "Let's look it over and find out. "suggested Harry at ones.

They all went had on the raft from the shure,,,,, and going into the engine room, they turned on the lights, in compolitions with Herry's thoughts, and there they examined somefully all the outer ports of the modhine the engineer doing the same-showever it seemed appropriate to thing had been disturbed. The instruments and works were all in place, the arms intust and everything belowing to a boat driven engine in place. The boy and girlscouts felt angler.

"Maybe they put some explosives in the engine somewhere. "urged Jess." "Cl n'elim ians Glandelimians are mean enough to do that."

"They didn't have thee "deal red Jack.

"By the way Dolors , suggested George giamerson to her as she was still standing near the engine." "bh/ seed we gro p around here with only search lights." haveles of battery current, suppose you turn on the lights for use"

"Right-O"esserted molores, reaching for the switch.

No illumination resulted over the engine. Again the switch was turned by the engineer believing she had not turned it right but no light come.

"They've out a wire somewhere."declared the Engineer. "Taybe by he may have used one of my pliers and just j nipped off what he could reach. I believe so because I've missed one of my pliers and have been search lag for it before you do make in."

"Try to start the steam engine in Engine re "requested Jean." Tayle home of those Gland-linian beyoccuts have out the wires lending to that he well has the light eigenite. It would not surmain anyone of us to find that he may have even tried to losate any of the steam valves and discble them. I'll bet he has done so. It would bejustike those Glandelinians so they could frustrate our trip. And yet they have I' sure for how can we go with Gentrude Angeline, and two others of our leaders disabled."

For the first the to even the surprise of the engineer the engine itself failed to respond to the Engineers turning of the main steam valve, in fact to take it plainer the valve modified turn no matter how hard he tried it. The wires to the lights had been severed, and something had been done to the main steam valve for the Engine."

"Enry "You are familiar with the lay out of this engine "bolores suggested to the Enginer" "Burnose you and your esalistant overhaul the wiring and the engine and repair both. There's plenty of time as we con't go whend onlybow."

For nearly on hour, the Engineer and the assistant whose experience obout engines had been very extensive, labored with the hose a basistance of his firemen to renair the dening done to the matchingry by their little enemies/ Nearly eletric wire giving lights had been severe, and every sort of water and stems value had been tempered with. It took the greater part of the afternoon for them to a tecomplish the work, but at length they were rewarded by a flash of lightfrom the lamps, but to put in new values was much some work. However when the lights again same on, this enabled the other work to go shead more quickly and in a some critically short time just a little before supper the engine itself had been repaired, and the new values placed in. George Zimmermon now some forward, with a subject to the rate.

It was rapidly approaching evening now but all thought of ale-p had been driven from the boy and girlscouts by their count experiences and in the dreadful thunder of the distant battle. They were now over anxious to also be in persuit of the six spies as had been proposed but with Gentrude being the one wounded and Angeline Richest too they were stumped. They too meeded Angeline Riches's munrdianship. Everyone were depressed, discouraged, and also enraged, and their enemity of the Glandelinian boy and wirlecouts beenn to grow. They however to head first for Abbleton as was propered and hoped Alas to that the Gertrude and the others would have recovered Soon the engines were running. Those on board within eight snowed their hunds t and handborch who to the grands and colliers on shore whose white gloves wibrated a message of good luck and good wishes untill they could no longer see them. "I hear something like motar boats "Innounced one of the girlsocols

The scott of motor tests tax me governt to all. No doubt two or three were rapidly approaching. They could even see them and they untched their approach with interest and some contentity. ""hey're going beyond us." Announced the boy James, as the boats drew mear.

"Suddenly a number of rithe shots rong cut in the evening still asse. A 1911- " top ad its way through the arm of one of the boys and he mank limp. Another shot same from another boat."

The engineer with more attitionably brought the novement of the huge raft boat to a lore tranguil movement . So usexpectedly had the rifle shots struck one of the boys, that had the all of theory on Wer small boat have some true the boy night have been killed. With a frantic offort the boy regained his balance and placing his self bubled a wile of wood treated hits wound water was merely a scratch, and then waited for development ... us to the fact that the child souts had not felt the rafts spred committed to the bear appropriate entition that as yet been wase to put the enginesxof the raft to its fullest nace/. Obedient to Jennians request, the boys and rimls prepared for the auden substitue notice of the with role rates out that it is a sense ing direction. No doubt Angeline Jennings had intended to have one of the nearest hoats named by the nuft. There were none took a conflue staget instantly the engineers were running in an unusual sunner and the roft began a meries of a venents that brief a doulated to constitute is it is out on the part of the enemy bonts to successfully launch a mirals with telling effect, and at the many that to my oreas a com-

Then with a pull at the controling levers the raft began to go forward with a spend that gave the raft some good distance sheed while one of the nume on the raft was brought into position. The engineer hisself hoped thereby to gain the advantage of position but the pulat of the hoats were eviently prepared for such a movement, for while the leading hoat sheered offshruptly to one side as if abandoning the chance the others opened with their long guns, and solid shot went arashing with great noise acrosss the raft, one going through the fabin but hurt no one nor fortunately did not do very much damage///.

"They'd shoot at childen the cowards"erdd the angineer as theraft was brought to an oblong form acrosss the river as if to try and make the onnowing boats ram themselves. It was a success with one for the polet couldn't stop its speed and with a crash it ran headon into the raft with disasterous effect. Those on board seeing the danger of being captured and not expeting mercy dived into the water, while the heat sank beneath the moves.

"There they go the commissionalited Jimmis. "Mow see thembest it when they think we have the best of them. The gunner fired a shot at

"Let un have the binoculars, and I'll toy and see if I sam make out who the Glerdelinians are. I guess it's still light enough now so that I can still s.e."

After a nomembat long examination of the other boats Jana handed the glasses to Jack. She shoul her head and glanced quickly at Dolores who was standing close to her.

"I wonder what that fallow thinks of himself." she said presently. "No you sunpose that he realiss that other people consider his the worst kind of a smeak, a reptile in human formale suchy must be case hardened if he doesn't hate h baself."

notionally get queer views sometimes.

"Here that Mutt Tellow is coming hook again in the leading boat." announced George Zimmermon, who now had the classes. "He's hitting it up too and has one of those I one range unspointed directly at the rwitt raft. Looks like i he is in an awail humon and commit we'll get away."

Astoniahed the how and wirlscouts saw wors of their persuenathen tefore heading a aim for the raft, , , but this time in a manner as if to the and surround it and out it off. The course of the leading boat which was a . lone rakish craft, , was laid so that it would crosses that of the raft itself and try to had head it off in front. With some trixisty the tors and wils observed the mouron. Jean berself draw har partel the life telefor emop ned to reply should have now whote In first in the la direction . The almon of the controls the approaching boats grew louder and nearer .

"Some of those hosts are going to cross each other in from t of us and try to place us in a cross fire of their guns. "announced the hovecout Harry, watching clusely. "T can see both the po piloet of the leading boat and the claudelinian soldiers now. "he continued, "And it looks as if the leader himself was that "Mr Mutt" sport helicus it is hea!"

"Here comes the glow of a hig fire some where. "show ed Jame." I'm what we can have some nore light even if it is from a fire. We can tell better what the fellow and his followers followers are doing."

"Guess we will have to be ready for snythin minusual when that follow is out persure."George said, with his eyes still at the glasses." They're avidently trying to do something in the stream. The forement of they are working away at smaller common."

"What do they seem to be doing?" both John and Jack inquired in a single breath.

"I can't tell from here it is so dark, and the glare does not roved it but I can secone of them apparently adjusting a mething. He seems to be quite busy shout it, whatever it is."

"Maybe gasped Ned "Ho's preparing to sweep the raft with mechine can fire or will carl highesplosive supon as."

"They're opening fire with some sort of small tuns or some on some of small tuns or some one of sputtering, "cried James excitedly."I can see the sputtering flashes of guns in the durkness from two of the boats. There, comes another in action. The continued.

"What can it be!" wondered Jack, "He can't be firing machine guns for they're not near enough for that ran e."

"I can see the flesh of some more guns, "announced George excitedly, "whythere are lots of them, "was Harry's astunishment for statement."
"If we don't lock out we'll be hit in case their fire sweepts the docks of the raft. Any more s. speed Mr Engine raft: !"

"Note of it 2 reassuringly enswered the ingineer gazing at the denorcus numbeats from the engine room window. "It puzzles me thous what those fellows are firing. It can 't be they're discharging machine guns for if they are they're westing lead for we're too far off for the raft to be swept."

From points of advantage and protection all of the boys and girls who had remained outside were intently observing the oncoming tests a, as they appeared to be following a course at some distance beyond their own. Some of them were even winning the race with the raft. The curious flashes of light from the unknown sorts of guns caused them considerable wond rewonderment and too they did make the sound of machine our fire. Not for long where they loft in doubt. The raft was being swept but none had been exposed and they heard nothing clattering suddenly there was a strange whizsing noise then some a terrific crash abourd of the raft itself, a flash and a mountein cloud rooling upwind. Ten of the boy and girlscouts were wounded and George himself h gave utterance to a cry of pain.

"Jack, Jack'he called. "Where are you Jack'hre you hit touf!?
"Here I wa Goorge, what's the matter!"responded the boy.
"Can you take the oun here .!I can't see a thing to fire. I'm hit by some fragments of the shell they toused on board the raft."

Jack spreng to the 'ong range gun at George's request notin g with horror that blood was flowing freed freely into g George's eyes from a gash in his forch a forchead."

"James, Henrie, Trancis" cried Jack "Help the poor German boy out of his precious precarious position here, so I don get at this ou and stop those fe lows. He's hadly hurt. Help him quirkly. "

Willing hands were extended to George 's assistance.Guiding him is him has afforts to leave the position at the mun, the three buys were soon while to seat the German lad in amour favorablenhoes.In the meantime more shots and shells had been simed at the raft, but were fired too close by the gunners on the boats, and the boats explo ed on the opposite shore.Jack had in the ma meanwhile unlocked a small box containing a first aid out fit, and now was ready to meanst his little Gorman chum with medical attention, which seemed to be badly needed.

"What was it that hit me?"Goorge asked presently, as Jock succeeded in sturming the low of blood. "I saw the explosion mean the man and beend lots of things striking in every direction, then felt a sach right on may forebead. I must one of the Glandelinian mannars not me with a shell all right."

"I'll be' I know", necured I akt these Clartelinian gunners are using cums that but high explosive upon the reft, or some sors of ship ship pell shells that a herl inch tolas or necessary dants or remothing. One of the frequents must have present through the down that he proceed to common, Medical mention does of the tagance that hit man. I see one of the force onto now."

"Hore is it !"inquived Jern. "Let to lick to it. plause."
"Here is the fragment sticking through the flloof floor of the reft. Here is the place where it went through the coul leaving a jarged hole in the middle. And the shell had wrecked aportion of
The cabir. Good thing no one was in there at that section."

Jean proceeded to extract the shell fragment from itslodgin g place, and soon brought it forth for inscettionthough she almost out her flogers in doing so. Jeck and many others kept a she look out for the boats, propering to use their guns and tri try to sink them all if they returned. With a considerable degree of interest the boys and girls examined the object brought forth by Jean who was now tying handened on her almost out fingers. It was a piece of iron fragment interlined with lead and tin about nine incheslong, and helf that in width, and showed it to place in fragment of a shreenell.

"Gee goudness."ej culated Jean." that shell must have hurled forth a few bushels of those framents and other materials and had our whole regiment of boyand driscouts been exceed on the dock at the time it would have created very sad havou. Those framents and those bolts and lead lying shout the docks would so through us all...!!

"You're right Jeen, they sure would."declared J. ck Jack. "Even had the shell exploded high shove us the cabins would have been no shelter and if the shell hadex loded high in the i sir they'd go through more then a person. Even the cabin would not shelter us. But Joun did you sat your fingers. "!

"I did on that fragment but not very badly. "

"Woll George you're lucky the fragment of the shell or the interior materials didn't hit you instead of the compass"Gongratulated "liddred Maxwell."We need both, but you more than the compass, if either is to be spared. I'm glad it wasn't worse and that the shraphell exploded on deck instead of up in the sir. What I dread is they may use rocket bonks on us yet.""

"Let's he rea y ready for the then if they return "suggested Jack." It's better to get out of their way. "Offered James. "We can best the ready heats if we try."

"Not much. "argued Jack." " a are not the running away kind and if in real trouble could sent forth a signal that'd bring us all the help we need as we're comforted. I close to the christian lijes lines. Those Glandelinians had some nerve to attack us in the face of general Vivians army. And we're going to show them that they're monkeying with a Dog with Rabins when they bother us. (They can use guns on children like that we can secure on men. And we sall of us can shoot better than they. I know from our recent experiences we'll sink everyouf of them."

"All Glandelinians are as savege as blood thirsty animals."smiled George Zimmermon.."Would it be right for us to be the same way!"Jack!"

"I certainly would"Stoutly maintained Jack. "You worken hoys don't know our situation I suppose. Glandelinians don't care any more for us then t we do about the serpent that spoiled the whole human race in the Garden of Pden and who personally is even responsible for this awful squa bhle. We've got as much rights to live as Glande linian the ildren have."

"Wall we won't havemuch came to have any arguments shout it" Jean announced. "The hoats seem to be on a retreat end going fest. Maybe obtistion troops have been aroused bythe firing and came to see what is the mater."

"Probably heading for the northeast. "Suggested Jack. "Let them go."

"If these two Professionals leave us alone, we will be there soon curselves and head for the Abbieann territoy."George Zimmernon re replied. "I don't think they everintended to go west at all..."

"We can heat them to a race. "Bossted Hons." What speed do you think or making right now without half or ing!"

"Only the Engineer knows I'm sure. "Maplied Fred, glancing tward the engine room."

"Well we can double that anyhow."Sold the Engineer who had overheard the remark. There's a reilroad train over gonder full of soldiers. See if I can take the raft overhoul that reilroad train-It's a train full of soldiers."

"Yes and it's mains some. "Jack stated. You'll have to hurry to make this raft heat it"

In a few minutes they had overhouled the train and were spending clong to shoot distance shead of it. The engineer had brought the large craft to a distance but alittle beyond the Styling Loopolius and the large ones the distance but alittle beyond the Styling Loopolius and the large transmissions.

"See him the to heat it or heat us. "ont of I ak this plantly.
"He never can do it." greed Middred Maxwell. "Besides he'll have "Here comes a string of those Glandelinian boats again. "Gried Jean pointing.

"Well of all things."declared "ildred."He's got nerve."
"Let's all of us keep ours and show them what "Rangers"can do."

"Let's all of us keep ours and show them what "Rengers"can do." edvised Angeline Jennings.

Nodding his acknowledgement the engineer to the command starses the raft on a course which he hoped would bring the raft beyond the ap a approaching for, and also into such a reverse position so that the gamers could bring to hear on the boats and blow them into the air. He was not quick enough however to execute this macouver and while he was attempting it the boats opened fie/. fire. Many of the boys this time were thronged behind every object of protection and they astonished those on the train by suddenly opening a rifle fireupon those in the oncoming boats. The boats replied with an astonianing crash and two shalls exploded on the raft, and several overhead, and others on shore but did no her manxiously watching the enemy as the boys continued their fir, the girls cout leaders observed that three of the hoats were about to attempt to cross before them once more. One gunner got the range, and to their horror one wont was blown in the air like an eruption with all in it killed or maimed and drowned. However the other boats replied with every weapon'on board, and all the defenders of the raft had to keep themselves strictly under cover. The usin fear was that if one of the shots or shells would hit right the raft would be torn asunder. Polores had trained her glasses upon the approach of the leading woats,, and from time to time q announced to her sister Angeline Jennings the movements of the boats.

"Three of them are almost overhe are almost in front of us now."reportedone of the boys. "The men in the foemost boat as training a new sort of cannon at us I believe. Get ready for that boat gunner and fire 'efter he does."

The gunner did so, and the test was demolished. However the attack of the other boats was growing hotter, and for four the cabin in which lay the wounded scout leaders would be hit the Engineer deter wined to execute a daring maneuver to either try and throw the dengerous persuers off of their trail or ram some of the boats at least. Calling to the boys and drls to secure other positions as the roft would be changing its sevements andmitht swing around, the engineer have the levers a touch. With the first impules of the outin as the raft surged shead. So that moment there was a frightful outburst of explosions of the water and a great wave was formed in the river which caused the huge raft to suddenly rise at an x note that threatened to course everyone behind the harricades to rull over to the other sade of the raft, and go into the water. The action of the wave however was one good thing. The raft in tilting down amain replaced the wave but surged it into another direction and three of the torts were ranmed, even though with a u quick movement the engineer threw off the stem, power,, altering the huge midders at the same mornit. As he did so a shell came across the raft and went clear through the trees on shore exploding and ringing down a shore of branches. The Engineer began to have the engis propell the raft a little back words tword the other side of the shore. Am in the engineer worked his 1-vers and the rudders guidedthe craft into a complete backwards movement then brought some them some distance to the r or of must of the boats. The boat can night have divined this movement and now the firing was directed at the engine rooms. Cosping at the sudden change of the firing and the sudden newsovements of the boats the boys and wirls stared about. In the movement rix of the loats were ranged most violently nd the defendenc opened fire caused consince the half watered boats to retreat.

A nown as of lead thunder case to their ears in the direction of the bridge. Impled with animens cloud of make they could are many iscent finite rail in many indeed of the sear time where each had been the railroad bridge. The missle sized at the orbin of the ingular countries they are the passed them and hit the bridge.

"Oh Hadvens. The to train. "Gasped Delores, with a startled look to her nearest commedes.

"They'll sure no right into that wrested buildes thanks that confound confounds claused in in number. "Graped Jack with horror. "Gen't wa win the race with the locomotive, and head then offishing round Engineer and flag a..."

"Sure"urged Angeline Jennings excitedly. "Hurry. Hurry ingineer get the engine going. Never mind the boats. Let our own gunners take core of them if they promue."

The engineer was already furing desperately at the levens. He brought the roft about so sharply despite its hure size that the raft corrected to a most already despite its hure size that the raft corrected to a most already down down movement. By throwing his weight sharply spaints the left levers controling the backwind sovements nowever the engineer avoided the completion of this dengance reverse, and brought the raft again to its accompletion. Health back aren the cause the finite ending back over the course they had sorecently traveled they brought the raft into an enwardmotion and skipmed along at a swift mace only a short distance off from that side of the shoe with shore with the enemy boats still on the permitt.

"That trein with that load of altiers will so right into that bridge whom the Glandelinin runners wrecked "gasped Jack with horror. "San't me head them off. "Swing around the maft and

However it seemed as if the trein was going much faster this time! Ad And inplain wiew now the onrushing train rushed maily along with its burden. What soldiers were on the train they didn't know but even if they were enumies they didn't wish to see such a dreadful applicable around the engine crew were doing their utnost tocower as much ground in as little time as lay within theirpower. An impasse cloud of block snoke was issualng with noisy force from the small about tossed upward like aninature volcante emption by the shrip sharp exhaust and it trailed like an ever growing streams hiding the coaches from the wiew ofore friends on the raft.

"How in the world shall we stop then anomies or friends!"questioned Deleres sharply. "We haven't a red gl flag nor anything with which to signal them..."

"Swing them down. "Suggested Jane caperly. "They'll stop."
"If they're Glandelinians I don't know whether the Glandelinian engineer and relired mensunderstands the signals used by our own side or not. "Ned replied. "They're getting closer and we must down methin gille added."

"Suppose we risk capture."

"Don't mend to go so cleas."

"Un land the raft on the track and then they'll stop. "Proposed Jack sarchstically.

"Sure "put in Jean with counter sarcase."Who's going to put this hig raft on the ritracks. And that'll wreck the train too won't it?"
"What can we do?""Ned or hid. "We must step them whether they're enemies or friends."

"It they're Glandelinians Goere what signal will they understand?" said Jean. "Shall we swing then down, or have you snything to signost?" "Oh I don't know"Gried George. "I don't understand any relirose signs to know what to do."

"I'll tell you what "Jeen ventured" I'll have the raft to be awang off to one side, round to quickly, n and run along side the shore as near as we dare without being grounded. As we draw us alongside you callout to the engineer testop. Whather Glandelinians or not we're all of the rame language. Get your lungs ready for a big whoop, there's lots of noise."

Indee George did high drawing in the deepest breaths as he proposed for the effort. The reft was varied alongshore easily enough and then they were moving alongside the share and a growd of them were seen on the shoreward part of the maft. Slightlyly miscalculating the speed of the ourushing train, the engineer brought the raft parallel to its course at a point some two par lengths behind the lescentive. A quick touch of the trottle soon carried themout of the gloud of scoke and cirdors abreast of the railroad engineer who leaned from hisposition for he was interested in watching the mane uyers of the great raf t and all the boy and girl stouts on board. "It's a train load of Artisannians" or led Violet Daisy.

Scarcely less than a mile separated both the train and the carmshing ruft from the wrecked bridge, and this distance was indeed being rapidly lessened by both the swift iron monster and the raft.

"Hurry now George, you got a loud screeching voice"shouted Dolores as the engineer again a plied the muffler to deaden the sound of the engines .TEll the reilroad engineer. For Heavens sake hurre.

George's shouts were plainly heard by the engineer of the engine but he evidently mistook them nevertheless for some friendly greeting for he only smiled and waved his hand as if congratidating all the brave bor and girlscouts on their skill. Doloreswas frantic. She screamed at the top of her voice, and waved her arms, and pointed down the track. But again the engineer responder d with a wave of his hand. Seemingly he thought the boy and cirlscouts were inviting bin to a race, and was waving his and acceptance for h they saw the train increasing in sped.

"You big mud turtle with an Ivorcy Ivory Tunk for a h ad. "Yellad George at the top of his lungs. "Can't you get anything through that round blockhead of for s. Shut her off. Shut her off. The bridge. The Bridge. It's BLOWN UP"

This saily of course was not everh and by the ein engineer, but the boys menner and the frentic action of the girls and boys appeared to convey a meaning different from that of the others. He glanced down the track.

"Shut off your engine. Shut off your Engine. "Yelled Dolores again swinging one hand in the well known horizontal sweep brown to all willroad can in any country indicating "STOP" Again polores remeated the sim .All of the others who were out there by the western edge of the raft catching the inspiration of Holores Energitic a: tabtom joined in making the same signal. This concerted effort on the part of the boys and girls evidently conveyed to the engineer the thought that something was wrong at last. He looked purstionly at the lads and the girls, and the parsusing boats and then pointed that way with a ned of his hard as to he after a hart on 3 711 the came of the excitment.

"Shut off your trottles you Nut"Yelled Dolores desperately shifting her flux to the file . "A - you trying to committ smalls Are you trying to committ sucide and kill everyone on the train."

" Jean herself ceased making the stop sion and franticully pointed shead. She then suddenly moved her heads as iminking something with her left or from her left with her right in the very familiar "uncouple" ovement of relironders. As if comprehending the "cut off"or uncouple "sign and at the same time comprehending that something was wrong with the tradk the friver closed the trottle looking down the lines of rails shead "Munt he underd saw caus at him to make amost desperate offorts to stop the onrushing monsten. His fforts were rewarded y a sudden listinct slackening of the inglaces eightywill on hour speed down to thirty miles on hour, and then to a mill stop but he was not a moment too soon and almost half a minute to the danger of being too late. Carridd on by the extreme momentum of its flight, the train crowded the locomi lon locomotive forward and the it seemed to the exicus boys and curis as if it surely must be plunged into the onen bridge. Browely the driver remained at hispost untill the locomotive rapidly dropped from the spread rails. Not antill his charge had comped onto the ties and carrened drunkingly to one side and come to a grounded stop did the driver and his firemen leap for safty. Their fall on the blasted track care only as the train ground to a spandstill.

The angineer of the raft soon brought the raft to : stop alose but sless alongside the shore nearest the combas. Hundreds of near were dronning from the care followed by still their and were too as the wife was brought to a stant still and all the child acoute crowded on dock. "Your gratitude is cortainly appreciated. "Angeline Jennings answered. "But we scarcely deserve it." It was partly our own fault that the bridge was wracked as we ware fighting the enemy in its location. If we hand't been so close that shell would not have done that damage. We couldn't do my less than try to stop you...:::::::"

"Nevertheless we are all very grateful for your set in saving the lives espoisil; of the women and children. "continued the officer" and I must compliment you and your followers on your skill as hoy and girlscouts, and your engineer handled the engine with exceeding

"You'll have to give Dolores here credit for the main sugestion." her sister replied with a smile as she proceeded to it introduce har com mades and chuma. Protesting her inshillity to perform any feats out of the ordinary, polores was dragged blushing to the foeground where she was made to listen again to the complimentary remarks concerning her ability as leader second in command out side of those of the higher wounded leaders..::.

"But come with me"Invited the high officer presently. "I wish you to meet the sin leader on this train. You'll be surprised to see who he is. You are indeed for tunated in finding him here even at the early night as it is. All of you can file off the raft and see the famous"General."

Making their way through the group of soldiers gathered on the shore by means of their landpln's all the how and wirled girls outs soon arived at a car much in better appointed than the others and much longer. Here were crouped a number of generals surrounding a tall strongly built man of six foot in height. His dense dark hair and mustache and heard gave a to ch ofunusual dignity to the rounded handsome fice while fleshing gray eyes betokened the vigor that lurted in his well bit knit frame and indicated the one of the secrets of his power with men and all the nation. All of the child scouts were astunished and wondered how he comp here and what his purpose was in heing here. was no less a person that Emperor Robert "ivian, pride of the very Abbieannian er nation and all the ar ins.

porceching to a res o res e respectful distance, the boys and girls stood at attention and gave the how and mirl scout salute. This was at once returned by the Daperor who used the same salute with dignity and gravity. A few words spoten by the general who had conducted the how and minbourts from their mast served to wollain who they were.

"I wished to thank you have and gals said the 'meror. "I can sure paise hy darling daughters for thin king up thr the scheme for raising such reliable brave boy and cirlscouts of your kind." ,nd you have indeed everted a dreadful catastrophe, and we are very gr. t grateful."

"Please do not mention it rour Gracious Sine. "Dulores herself protested."We felt that we could not do otherwise than stopbyour train

if possible."

."But how do you all b happen to be in the vinicity! thought you were a troop of hoy and girlscouts belonging to general Vir lania's army." n a few wods, Angeline Jennings herself brieflty recounted the advan adventues through which they had passed but a short time proviously since Violet and her misters sent them on the route to solve the Great Abbisann mystery. Leaving out no details materer, she gave an outline of the other in cidents concluding with; "And here we are and this wrecked bridge is the result of the 'dutt' spy's latest attempt to-itherput us out of the way or to frustrate our mission."

"A most remarkable recital" commented the ampror after 1 istenta g with interest to Angel ine's story" ou may be sure of our assistance in bring about the capture of this person and his yo little Jeff associate

"Thank you"return d Angeline heartily"Our leeders Gertmide Angeline and Penrod and Angeline Siches are severely wounded and we have done all we could for them as far as it is possible. Do you wish to

"Just a moment"protested the general himself. "Our men have have already attached telegraph instructants to the wires and have no do doubt reported this demand to the bridge to conteral Vivian who we found out is at Hangar's run-Somethings wrong there as at fast wa're not getting any answer. Will you girls and hows wait a short while untill we learn what measures will be taken to move our train for ward!" To this the c ild scouts readily consented, and watched with interest the rapidity with which the men working the telegroph finally secured results. Shortly an orderly approached, saluted and handed a paper to the Empror himself. Reading the message rapidly, he assim turned to the bor and striscout s.

"It is impossible he at te stated with a show of slight breatience in his voice "to secure thremsportation on some other line because of the washouts caused by the recent terrible flouds and the foest fies raying, and besides because of somuch of the energy interfering with the re ilroadlines elsewhere. And traffic too beyond the bridge is in a congested condition because of a bettle raging close by and a repair traus cannot reach us for a long time. The delay while annoying is unavoidable. I shall thank you again, and wish you every success in your undertaking."

hextending his hand and showing his regret with real tears of sorrow in his eyes that Gentrude and her two friends were wounded, the Empror indicated that the interview was at an end. "Ith hearty hard classes the hove and girls of the officials departed for their raft, leaving the soldiers and their generals grouped about the greet Empror Emperor. Just as the Engineer was shout to start the raft going again Bolores went in and placed a detaining hand on his anne "Bon't start the engine yet she said."I have something tosuggest to my sister." She wentuck side age in and coming up to her sister touched her on the arm. Her sister glanced suickly at Solores.

Dolores whishered her idea and them Angeline Jennings called attention to everyone. They obeyed.

"Say conrades"She then suggested. "If the Great Empror is in an hurry to go smawhers, he can't do better than take a so t of trip with us. What do yousay to invitin g him to have a little ride on the raft. And Violet, and her sisters will be tickled pick when they hear of this."

"We can carry himall right and allhis generals too. "responded " d Radeliffe"But then the querters will be rather comped. We have't room to entertain many visitors."

"If we can stand it, he and his minoral sought to get along for a while." "All right then, you have my portionion"declared Radcliffe who was their main superior of all. "Go and ack him yoursalf polores"He grimped. "It was your suggestion. I overheard your whisper."

In an instant Dolores was racing down the gang plant as fast as she sould not, and was soon on the shore, and racing for the train. Not many minutes pushed, before she was seen returning, accompanied by the Emperor and only his highest grounds, and has given destroy and the general who had first greated they. To the rousing sheer of the soldiers and the women and children refucees, the hig raft with its new passengers, swept under the wracked bridge pushing the float ing wrecking before it. Headed to the northwestward, the boys and mirks were soon f for from the scene.

"Moore did rou intend to go Sire! "Asked Radeliffe from his sest. "Here comes those darm Glandelinian hosts again and a great number of then this time." interrupted the boyscout Jemes, who had been seeing the notion of them in the where of some hig fire on shore which threw out a great light over the darkened vators. "They're coming fast from the southward."

hen they Then Phey're going to get what's coming to them "Gritted Radeliffe."Tver; number to your pieces."and he hipself drow forth from his compartment in his cabin a magazine rifle.

It was true. The Glandelinian gunious were and in derting twend the raft in greater numbers as if vindicatively determined to bring disaster to the raft by a severe cross fire. As they approached they opened a severe fire. Those at their guns let go a volley of shells, with those who had remained on deck threw their witten to their shoulders and replied with wollet after molley. There was a sudden sharp lurch of the raft, which told the bors and girls that something had happened to either the envise or the engineer or that one of the missing from the nearest boat had found ludgement in a vital place. They rushed to the spot, and found that the enginer had been killed, and his two assistants mortally sounded, and a part of the engine room denotial at and the engine not going.

The engineer had succeeded in stopping the engine before he dropped dead. his of the boy gunners hit a boat and the force of the explosion sent the boat and draw high into the air and the fragments dropped straight to the water.

"Get in there Gerogeyou know how to run the engine. "cried Dolores as she was looking at the hort boats with classes in hand. We also all right now. A christian battery is massing on shore and the boats are on a retreat. Hurry and right the raft he fore it rams something we don't wan to ram into."

Straight tword the engine room rushed the lad. In faccy the boys and girls pictured the terrible scene should the boy fail to reach the demolished engine onbin in time, for if the raft went of its own accord with the driving engine still running there's he a fatal disseter for them ellebelores horrified to think that the bonts should have attacked them and caused this gave orders to the gamers to nim straight and blow the bontsout of the water, and this was done the guns on shore also opening fire. Even the Emeror experienced to scenes of unusual grave-measure is he are furned his head aside out caring towitness the sceep when the expected erach come. All were startled to activity, and attention by Jeans shout.

"hook-hook" orded the ciriscont, who had followed Gaurge tward the engine room. "Look George has made it. Oh K'I,m glad we're saved." "Why do they call the country of Abbleannia, Abbleannia! Asked George Zimmerston."I' a sort of a stranger here, being German and I have not heardmach about the country or its holy cities and towns and people and so on."

"Abbinanniat" replied The Emporor" It's a name devidentived from an old Mickname or spellation for the ancient people who inhabitated the nettice. For a long time the people who lived there where known as an Intercessionary nation - romen who fought other wicked countries a to succor the good constThey neverlost those wars. The name gradually was turned in to the present form of St Abrahammia--Santa Ann and the country is now known as Abbin--Annia."

"Then the people are made up of all kinds of con ributions from all other netions?"Inquired George very much interested. "They were all mixed up!"

"No indeed" was the enswer. "Hut the people of the country did onl" accept people into its own from fortern powers which were only Catholics and which spoke the Laattattangue. Leten Tongue. A faint and smile greated this characteristic remark.

" ossibly agreed the Empror"; there were not so many Glando linian armies in that locality. It is regrettable of ourse but for that matter the whole war is regrettable. It brings good n to no one and yet we have to fight. Glandelinia forced it on us."

"I agree with you."quickly responded the German boy." tit's no good and Glandelinia is still ore wicked for having brought it on Put is t she the agressor. I heard Abbieannia was!"

"We are the aggressor, but it was forced upon us to defend the nations good name because of Glandelinia's hurrille child she ve trades throughout the whole ."

"where away!"asked Angeline Jennings, scanning the glary horizon

"Almost dead shead near a huge bend in the river." replied Jan e. "Just a little to the right, and on the summit of that long hill. It is just on the fringe of that forest that appears like Parsley." "T see it by the aid of the fire glow"declared polores. "T can't make out that army of caverly it is though , but they're Abysminkilians just the same. It looks like momething of the army belonging to gears 1 Concentinian Aronurg. but I'm not sure....

"That wht it is. "eserted Angeline Jennings. "you've got good eyes." "Maybe we are far from the army yet and it must be a large arty of Abysninkilians out scouting or also breaking in for some night strolling. "quggested Jean....

"If that is the case" Jack out in "we are near general Concentinian Aronhurgs army comp. And indeed I'm glad of it because I did wish to see that army and toown can get some do o doctor for Gertrude Penrod, and Angeline Riches. And too I'm interested in the idea of seeing wht general Arenburgs army looks like.....

"Keep your eyes open then "advised wildred. "It looks as if we are going to pess the hill(fill pill) in a minute, and then we'll haveplanty of

"I believe I see alot of tents for in the distance a whole city city of them and they're white. "shouted Jack in a short time..."I see an immense city of tents.Oh-h-h-h-h"exclaimed the boyscut excitedly" here must be an endloss city of them, and there's fifty squadres the Abbieannian cay r cavarly and all swarming forward atonco. There are so many of them itherita as if the nation itself was an arm of army of onverly."

"Just see all those big tents." was James oxel od excited comment. "There must be nearly amillion of them. "he should be not in the cred to be.

"Not quite a million"laughed the Emeror"But there are quite a goodly hundreds of thousands. More andnore troops from seamingly nowhre nowhere have been and still are ariving daly and nightly, while andher army is coming soon. Concentinian Aronburg is consissioned to hold Myletz Myletze fromedvencingupon the Abbienn territory, and I know that genera general Aronburg can do it."

"Admiringly the boys and girls gazed at the insiring scene and and a 11 the camp files which seemed also by countless thousands of glows indeed so many camp fires along the shore and over the hills and landscapes at one time. Their interest and surprise and als admirationknew no bounds. Here was an opportip opportunity or serving another great christian general for a time. All too soon was the big raft in the vinicity of the camp. It's approach was detected by sume of the cavarly patrol almost as quickly as the camp had been observed by the child accute. Several equadrons of them atomce advanced and lined up along the shore in an effort to learn the identity of those on the raft. Proceeding to a spot indicated by the Pempror George who was now the only one operating the engine brought the reft as close to shore as he dared without causing it to go aground. A large group of general and other officers on horse back rode down in to the very shallow water, and the Emperor and the others went off the raft by means of the gangplank fist. Then the boy and girlso uts followed. Recognizing the Emperor they senset ups hearty cheer-murning to an officer in his imadiate vinicity the Emeror spent searal minutes in an animated conversation. Evidently he q was questioning that general closely concerning important matters. At length he turned to the child scouts with a broad smile on his face.

"You may rest easy on one score at leas "he said. "Your "friends" the Professional International International Spies made their way back to general Vivians army about an hour ago."

"How do you know!"asked the hoyscout Radcliffe almost indreducusly. "My inform tion comes from this general here. "replied the Emeror with a smile at the boys pertiant query. "He states that a natrol near general Witnes army reported by wireless signal teleparah telegraph that twopersons with a party of Glan elinian soldiers resemblaing those of the "Mutt and Jeff Fellows was seen crossing to the westward only an hour previous toour arival here. They have persuit but the enemy spies had the swiftest herses and escaped. They had been traveling rapidly and had n very strong escort. "In that case they have escaped us."

"Nevermind them for a while." urged Jack to Jean.Our first duty to our cause is to secure a good doctor for Gertrude , and our two wounded friends. We head is all right so there is no need of a dotor

"Are we going toreme in here for a while and see general Aronbu gs Aronburgs army or go on the trip. "Objected a boyscout. "Be"

"Yes it wouldn't be poi polite to go sway so soon"said Mildred sheepishly."The Empror bimself and the generals with him has not had a chance to ask us to supper. "she added with a wink at Jack who was standing near.

"If we get to eat win the Emperor"said Angeline Jennings"We'd sure be favorites with him then. But you had a lunch only a few hous ago and now you're hungry again. h What is the matter Mildred!"

'I helieve hunger seems to be a sort of efflation from which most of us always suffers. "laughed Dolores. "I'm sure I don't know what to do. For one however count me out. I'm not a hit hungry."

"But that's not an affliction. "maintained wildred, joining in the spirit of the chaffing"Th t's what I may call a disease."

"It's disasterous whatever you can call it. "asse rted James. "Well maybe it's amighty goo d thing you have me for an alarm clock anyhow stoutly maintained the girlscout. "If it was not for me to remind vouces in a while all of you would have forgotten to eat. Radcliffe had sounded the Mess calltwice and none of us either heard or answered we were sointerested in the Emeror. And we could e at with himand his generals. Th I'm useful."

"Well you speak to himthen?"declared Angeline Jennings almost severely. "If he allowes it your a wonder. It's a dignity none of us could ever expect sating with the Empror. The idea. And we don't look for dignities."

However she would not be put aside and she went to the Empror for or with the request. Laughingly giving instructions that all the boy and girlscouts should be well suppled with supper, the Empror asked to be ex u excused for a shot time. He atonce retired in company with his generals and the generals of Aronhures army to a large tent somewhat isolated from the others and no doubt set aside for other purposes. The boy and girlscouts walked about under the guidence of a hoyaccut officer of Concentinian Aronburgs ermy for he too had droves of child scouts called the "Retniners", this buy having been detailed for thepurpose inspecting the big tents,, and all the magnifidence of the CAMO. They saw several tents that had through someumown reason been hadly burned and damaged, but the officer said that they were destroyed by spies. Note of new comers toowere being given day by day practical instruction in cavarly drills by exerienced cavarly officers. None of the recruits however were permitted to take charge of cavarly horses untill they knew how to ride the animals as well as the veterans. Then they were given fast horses, and permitted to go with the main holds. Dolores herself declared that her fingers itched to have some such magnificent horses as these she and her friends saw here.

16-15-1

The other sort of cavarly horsesxand those belonging to the drawous did not however interest her or her followers, but there was one par ticular horse that Angeline Jennings said would just be the "berries" for Gertrude Angeline. The large tents were built in circus style with con siderable space between them. A turle suddenly attracted their attention. Their guide announced that supper was readyyy.

"I declare it's funny I forgot I was hungry. "asserted Mildred Maxmall.

"I did too"said nolores. "Everything in the camp ismighty interesting, and these new boyscouts here too called the Retainers. "It certainly ismighty interesting agreed June Hellfort." nut I don't believe they have snything better than general Vivier sim/ has in tents but the cavarly horses and the equipment and the batteries are splendid. We however can show any of the enemy a clean pail of heels when we would be riding on those horses and they were perusieing us."

"Right you are Mildred. "Jimmie returned vigoriously.

"I didn't say that "declared Mildred. "It's Jane standing by you." "Well you agreed with her anyhow"asserted the boyscout." and now none of the Glandelinians have nothing on me toowhen it comes to eating. Advance comrades"he continued with a lauch. Let us make a desperate attack on the supper."

Pefore all the how and girlscouts had finished the splendid supper provided before them under the direction of the emperor they were again visited by their recent mess-nger. He had been very busy during the short interval, and as the child scouts later 1 armed had gotten in touch with the entire battle front along general Vivianslines at H ngars run by means of telegraph and telephone. Orders had been issued with whirlwind pro piness and re information recieved to be glanced atomly once are it was saftly stored in the master mind of the great wameror. Indeed long after this the boy and discous learned to value the shility of the man whom all Garantia and have files fits ind even Abbiennis wir dependingungs to bring noor Calverinia out of the terrible crisis in which she had been placed by the drougful disaster. After inquiring if their wants had been properly supplied, the great Emperor a approached Angeline Jennin's on a subject that the mirlscout lender anticipated would be mentioned. It wasone she had dreaded. Seating himself at her invitation the Emperor began;

"What do you think of general Archburgs army camp by this

"It is great"heartily responded the girlscout leader. "I like it. It's more than magnificent."

"and the principal, is it not a very correct one?"

"I thinkso"replied the pirt. "I believe it is a grand idea to have so splendid an army before us. Do all the n s new boy and girlscouts seem to learn readily."?

"Yes "was the answer "But we are in need of one thing. General Aron burg is getting from someplace a new regiment of boy and dirlacouts and he is in need of more instructors. There are not enough men and women who can teadh. And many instructors are afraid to be with regiments of boy and girlscouts saying they have the most dangeous adventues of all."

"What An eline Jennings suspected she saw all too plainly was coming.

"Do you not percieve our need of more instructors. "Continued the

"Yes Sire, I can" Returned Angeline. "Then as if determined to meet the issue squarel/ she went on, looking straight into the others facel

"If it were not for the fact that we were comissioned on a certain mission by your fair daughters, I and my followers would be delighted to remma n remain here and officer our services in any way they a light be used. Violet and her sinters, your fair and lovely daughters have sent uscut of amission that requires our ties and utmost energy however and it would beout of the question for us to even think of such a p ssibility unless you can cancel their commission to us, or unless general Aronburg allows the Detainters to accommny accompany our bride and turn into our emport the "Roying Rangers." For just a moment no answer was made. The two sat gazing silently acrosss the table. At length the Emeror spoke in a lower tone;

"You are might m dear girls cout. Though they're my children I have no nurtherity to cancel any of their orders without their consent because they being so unaturally good always I had faithfully promished them anything they wished, and I cannot go back on my word to them. But if general Aronburg wills it, they may become your band and you can instruct them as they go along with you But loyalty to our country and her needs in these trying imes I know always is your first and only consideration vou always let principal be of far greater moment than any necuniq ke e pencun lary gain, and therefore you never can go wrong. I'll see what the general says and if he can spare them you may have your own proposition. After that I'm going over with a doctor to see what can be done to your friends and mine Gertrude, Penrod and Angeline. My hearts been feeling heavy since I heard the news and I'm greatly worried."

So saying he rose, and want off. He was gone a considerable time but he returned and sold;

"The general says it's up to the leaders of the boy and girl scouts themselves. If they desire to do so they will go. So I went then and consulted them. T. ey said they'd be willing to go snywhere with those who have been so faithful to the Princesses. Will you accept now?" "Gertainly with pleasure"declared Angeline Jennings. "And hesides it'll be a reinforcement for us."

"I'm glad to hear your decision." said the Emperor .

So saying he arose and extended his hand to Angeline Jennings. Indeed in that firmclass Angeline detected the emption that swept over this great Ruler of Abbieannia, who carried the full safty and responsibility of his perfectly righteous nation at that moment on his shoulders. Long afterwards she declared that one of the proudest moments of her life was the one in which she and Empror Vivian claspd hands across the table table in general Archburgs big camp. From that time her efforts i to instill vinto theminds of all her comrades ideas of grand patriotism andloyalty increased. After riving full instructions that the boy and girls out a should be well calred for during such time as they wished to remain, the Empror himself present to go about his duties esectell; the duties for which he came up to this cap for and which he secrified such a long trip from his own city. As he was leaving Angeline Richees asked;;

"We feel that we must continue our persuit of those six accomplices of the two Mutt and Jeffspies whether we have our leaders wounded on board the raft or not, and to try to prevent their selling the lans they had stolen to sme of those famous and most dreaded Glandelin ian generals in the western drama of the war. They are no doubt on their day tward that destination and we ought to follow. Can yourive us some fake pass to go through the Glandelinian comps under Izner Myletze, and sove though by river with this reft."

"That is becommible the Glandelinian generals and officers under Mylotzes will not respet no pass of any kind fake or not. "returned the Faeror. "No one but the highest Glandelinian generals are permitted to do that and then only under orders. If however if a you should bitend to dare make such a risky move even without my own knowledge or consent. I would not provent it. Our own men will have orders to permit you through our own cans but if you want to get through the enemy territory you'll all have to disguise as Glandelinian boy and girl scouts and to make matters worse fly the hated glandelinian flag during the journey. There is plenty of captured Glandelinian battlefields round here where general Aronburgs army men had captured many enemy flags. Use some of those if it is necessary but it'll be a sacrifice for who likes to fly a clandelinian flag even for necessity. I know I would not."

"I wouldn't either"said Angeline"put if there is no other way we'll try it. But it is stillnore periods perilons. If the Glandel inlans found as out and we flew their flag to get through, they'll let locse like desonsupon us."

"They're nothing else anywhay"curtly replied the wapror. Expressing their attains anake, the boy and griscouts left the great Empror, and proceeded to their arht seeing. Several of them were very anxious to isl the quarter master a ergeant to obtain the flags if he had say 4 claring that they could take a hint easy. This was -naily arranged, the two standards were secured, and they Incided to

"Bon't make a mistake though wormed Angelinet 81thes "and fly that Glandalinian flag now.Or we'll haveour own friends to at us with the same fury. They'll bemistaking as for glandelinians...:::

"You have quite a raft there"politely sugn suggested, one of the officers/"

"Thunk you " r replied Angeline Jonnin s Jennings.

"Perhaps your engines are quite swift?" gontinued the officer.

"Angelime Jennings shrugged her shoulers. She did not wish to boast. "I helieve there is no host that is able totravel faster."S ated the other. "I am a firm heliever in the merits of that raft of yours. "Possibly" realid Angelime Jennings, a little metiled at the fellows insistence." ut we are very much satisfied. Our hig raft host sure can and does carry a heavy load. It is also arreadilks a huge granboat."
"What do you say to taking me i on for a short trip!" Wheationed the officer.

"what shall we to confident" queried Angeline Jennings turning to her herosagations who were grouped about here"Shall we give him a ride on our raft, or shall we not."

"If he desires so why not." vociferated Jein.

" s have to be carefulated as take on when they are streamers and unknown to une "Dealther Lack "It's all right if he is not and homent to goodness Angel inless collier, "It's even if you let them not away much saything like that they'll take the miles own nexusBus if your sure as can trust him and he's not a enemy in disquise we can take him on the raft and hand him ont a short trip. "e can do it, and he secretly watchful too..."."."."

"Maybe not"contioned Jane"These Glandelinian spies are pretty slick and man disguise sowell as Angelinias that they'd fool their own Grand wother."

"Thy haven't got anything on the boy and girlscode ofor side when it coves to fooling anybody. We o have often proved that. "eaid Minnie, Jeans sister.

"Weil I vote we show this gentlemen how the raft rides right now." Volunteered Dolores.

"Who will second the motion."

The momention was secondended.

"Contrary."! No Answer.

It was accordingly agreed that they would give the officer a trial of riding on the raft-Quickly the news went round the comp and by the time preparations had been made everyone was keenly alertafirst the boy and girlacouse everyone of them as is their way conceilly inspected every part of the raft, engines and so forth politing and examining everything. At that the immanse raft was promounced ready and final instructions were gi given as to the course. It was agreed that as a test of all the munities that was in the engines of the raft bo at a messure should be carried by wineless to an outpost not manyallas to the northward. An officer therewould give a receipt to the camp for the message, and theoretim of the receipt to the camp would determine whom the ride of the officer turned out.

"Be careful comrades." Contioned D clores. "The officer is not so sure as to the outcome of the ride for he is telephoning to some other officer of his to have a strong escont of cavarly to follow after the raft. He declares he may drop his message if something goes wrong for I heard hissay when he telephoned that Myletzes army is very far extended and he don't know whether we'd go too meer or not, and he wishes the strong covarly escont to prevent on y financiar."

"Did you hear hintelephoing "Asked Jean indimently.

"Just now" menlied George. He has but just left the booth. He sure knows his onions. If he was a enemy in "iscuise now he wouldn't do that for he even told general Aronburg of his purpose for the ride and Emperor wivien too and warned both to look out for the safty of all on board. He almost feels like chancing his mind. How he could the information I do not know. But if he backs out now he feels we'll look upon his as a fraity out."

"Then we'll fix the enemy if they try enything." Heclared Radeliffs who was standing near.

The man now came up to the raft.

"Please do not no too fast. "he said" and keep a good watch sheed as well as do not no too far from our own territor "he heard. "There's danger whead. A large part of "Intetra's army is on the advance, and ind by general Granier."

"In that case Angaline"said Radoliffe who had been for the time being in the cabin with the wounded girls and Pennod""de've got to beat these Glandelinians by some few minut a minutes. I'll warrant Myletze is going to try to win the race for Abbleaus by a trick." "Fyidently General Aronburg has not himserred. "Laughed Jann. "He has been able to advance in the face of gen anyother general but Concentin ian Aronburga is didf different, and beknows it."

"It loke that may surely. "agreed "innie. "But we can watch out." After recleving explicit instructions regarding the location of the noint where the messages were to be delivered, the boy's and wirls filed up the gangplank onto their raft the officer following. They had a new engineer now, the dead men having been brought to the camp for decent burid, and this engineer followed the example of seeing to it the engine was in perfect condition before announcing that he was ready. Several of the boy and dislacou . had advised the engineer to let off some steam before starting, but to these objections however the engineer returned but one enswer. They needed all the steum necessary in case case they addidentally had to run a gauntlet of Glandelinian mens, and he would not now spare any steam. If he had to it would only be to their own sorrow. The raft was soon under way and in a short time the meanest section of the huge comp had been left far in the rear. They had not gone far when there was the sound of a series ofpistol shots as if it was the startling sign al for something, and two long huge looking craft shot off fromm a cove in the shore. One of them had opened themuffler for the start and Jean who had seen this declared afterwards that a stream of fire seemed to burst from the exhaust pipe and go s mile down the stream. The roar of the bosts motors completely dromed out the exhaust stack of the rafts engines. The foremost boat which was a long ratish green looking thing and counted with guns easily took the lead, and etendily guined on the speedy raft, in spite of the engineers hest efforts. He men something was wrong and therefore used every trick and device of which he was master. Soon Angeline Jennings who had been usive g her night binoculars constantly announced that shecould see a 1 rgs group of gray clothed men o standing at a part of the long hoat and that it carried a Glandelinian standard. Not with wishing to shoot at the host Radcliffe shouted to the engineer;

"Ran the host.Do something."

The engineer did start the raft swinging around as fast as the huge thing could do, placing itself in the way of the ho st. Saning this the driver of the hoat prepared to make a quick movement of his own. His action was excallent but he didn't do it quick enough and both the raft and the hoat meet with a resounding crash that must have been heard a mile. At once hundreds thronged the railing of the raft with leveled istols and rifles.

"Those in that bout stay where you are. "cried Radcliffe springing into view."Sorrender as hundreds have you covered."

Eyclamanations came from the hoat.

"I'll run back to the end of the raft and see what's doing there "saild Jean.

"Jon't wanned Jack. "You might be exposed, ghe took the him t and recoined.

That other confounded boat may have the advantage and rake us while we're overhauling this one "or led Jaan . u suddonly. "This boatsaust have picked this pour spot because theme beyond doesn't have tos op."

"That is some trick of those Clandelinians I nur must say "Chined in Jane." Hut we'll crash thisons too isces and drown then all if their assistant [descon us."

Raddliffe ran rapidly along the deck. The boat wanted to bry and make a get away.

"Hault"The voices of a number of boys and cirls commanded.

"Yes a surrender"cried Jean. If you make amove we'll sink you and you're hadly damaged already. We'll pay you rescals for making war on us dilldren of Abbiennia because we're so good. We'll fight you as we fight the devils."

Stärtled by the unusual circumstances of being overhauled by so many boy and irlacouts, the Glandelinian boatmen paused in wondernent. They claimed inquitrengly shout searching for sight of the other boat hoping for it to come to their assistance. But it now was no whore in sight. And catalying it a brick or that the boat was sorking somewhere around in hope of superished the raft, the driver medided to take the chances and started the boat agoing a suddenly intending to make a heasty get amey. Then already the dronlag of the motor told him there are need of herte if he was to make a get many from these dungerous christian child socuts who were figurer little soldiers thing even the men and hope to even par the help of the other host before a dignat, dispater happened, impatient at the trick of those on the raft the Glandelinians funed. The nothers started.

"Halt I say "again came the command from some whose also on the raft this thee. "This is the last time we'll mare you."

The driver was plainlypuzzled. He now many of the boy and miris couts shall and higger living the railing of the raft with weamons leveled at thim and despite the darkness detected a lung row of very determined little eyes peering forth from the sloom of the roft. With a start the driver realized however the that the rifles and pistole leveled at him and his commades on the host indicated the presence of the girl and hovecouts all Glandelinian generals adreaded The Wandering Pangers". His thoughts roited from frontically. His inpulse still and to turn the boat and hasten from the spot as rapidly as themotors would go by lying low as so the shots wouldn't hit him or his courades but he rentized that they had mine atomoside the raft too, and those the children on board were of a dangerous and determined themster, and would not hesitate to let wo a fire that would destroy the hout and kill every man of them. A volley of questions from George Zi mermon in German issued forth but the language wasone unfamiliar to the Glandelinian driver, and he could only shake his head.

"I cannot understant you kid. "he at length ventured. "Are you mur legaers. Can't you speek our tongue. Perhane we might understand anch other better if you com:"

"Abbicannian"Repeated the German boyscout from his location . "Tes I speak the Abbicannian language were good. "This statement was replied by his assent agent and pronouncation, but the Slandelinian driver accepted it at its face valuevgiving his whole attention to the matter of carying on the halting conversation with the hop of making his esca e.

"Thy do you have and girlscouts stop me and wreck my hout!"the driver asked. "How did you get on the river with sucha his boat in

"Thy did you persue us with your houts!"

"We are supposed testopall strongers o tiln a from the differ top of the christian lines"Rablied the Driver.

"I thought so. Well sir; you and your comrades will remain where you are, while your conrades steps on board to be disarred. Remember we got you all cornered. There's hundreds of us covering you and there's only seven d you in the boat. Seven trying to capture us. You must be

"That's nice"scorned the Glandelinian driver hotly. "why you are entirely at taken. I have never been in Glandelinia. I am from general

"You have had a long tourney then, "replied another of the how scouts, with nock sympathy." nd will need a rest before proceeding. If you're frue conoral Aronburhs camps then shy did you person us when you know we're christians boys and girls. Therefore dince you e persued us, and have some excuses to make we will be glad now to accept the homitality of our quarters on the raft untill we bring to back to the lines. If you can prove your christians and made a mistake in persucing us all right. But you'll have to prove it."

"But I'm from the christian army camp to the westward of hre. I was not prauding your raft! was in q in a race with the other boat and you will cause me to lose the race. "stormed the driver barbulag to see that nothing could make the boy and girl scats believe him.

"Yes, and you sure came fullspeed tword our raft. Next thing you'll say you couldn't soo us in the dark" surcastically declared the German hoyscout. "As I stated before we have very confortable quarters here."

"Well occupy them then enaped the driver. "I am going on."

"Listen" command ad the boyscout. "Intess you obey commands and lange your mempons on hourd four boat and come on hore we shall be oblied obliged to fill you and your comrades full of holes. Don't you son you reckless full three achine guns are trained on the boat and within close range so close that you couldn't ascape."

The driver caught the simificance of the remark, and decided thate he didn't care to take such on chances when it was sucide-He know full well the temper of the "little Rangers" , and therefore winely oc concluding that nothing would be rained by further efforts to try and convince the boy and pirisocuts of his identity, he driver of the heat put put away all thought of irrediate escape. Boats from the other sds of the caft full of boys in uniforms and sirls too suddenly appeared to the left and with such startling suddeness that the driver and his followers nearly lost their composure. The one in the storn carried a rope as he app the rowboat approached the inunch. The driver held up a protesting hand and waved away the bond.

"You don't have to tie me and my comrades up. "he said. "We'll go with you and your scouts peacoably. To shall not try to run nway from such girl and boy scouts."

"There's no need to the you fellows un you couldn't escape anyway." retorted the lad. "But we're going to faster the bont so it'il come slong with the raft, and some of us are going to occupy it too. Hur ry step into the raft before we lose our patterios. You're delaying us long onough. and ispossible wo'll capture the other boat too."

Believing coupliance with their wishes the only way to placate them, the driver and his man followed his captors on board the raft where they were placed in one of the cabins, where the doors was securaty locked and guardeplaced so the prisoners couldn't escape from even the windows. A bunk with straw natteresses afforded them slooping accommodations.

"I do not understand the a angement." the soldier began, as he surv ey d theinterior of the cabin. That's the idea. Why bring us here!"

"And why did you persue us if you're not foes"demanded folores."If we had not captured you and your seven son here, some of our shore comrados might have done worse to you as the shore was lined with troops fust as soon as you and your other boat put off after us. Not att of the Glandelinians are considered enough to recieve durter from us; but I liked your looks, and so you are here nowinstead of your budies riddled with holes and floating amov down stream. "she added tapping her rifle and smiling significantly, while she still tooked cut from the cabin window.

"Glandelinian soldiers are not isually welcoo in our cabins"Added the gartscout Joy St Claire somewhat severely add no had no round for you out alde so we were good enough to give you a cable for quarters

"But we're not clandelinians we're for lorders, "brotested the driver vicoriously.

"No"! inquired Dolores not too impolitaly. "Worldmers ah! Well that makes it stillworse for you. Whalt a moment I hear an officer approach ing. We shall soon 1-arn if you're Glandelinians or not."

The Clandelinian driver was startled to discover a situ rat friend looking howsport some in, with a very good looking how called by the other "radoliffe". The latter was evidently the officer. Smith ing the boy and girlscout began a report concerning their captive. Fuldantly full datails were being asked and given for the conver sation consumed very much the

"Come with me only you "the hoyacout officer sheeringly said to the one who was known as the heat driver at length as he turned

"But officer of the boyaccuts "protested the driver'My conreduc are out there in the other boat walting for me toreturn. I cannot leave thom. We were in a race."

A few words of command from Radoliffe caused a number of boy and girlscouts to make heaty paparetion for departure on armounded bouts of their own. They were evidently shouth tosally forth to capture the crew of the other heat. The driver filmed. He had been very foolish he thought to make soriah a statement. The officer indicated pretty sharply and severely that the driver blussif was to proceed with him and six other he scouts on to on to the deck. For some distance they passed along the deck. Into another cabin they

And he went back again to notores and were foun and others were stand ing gro ped on the deck. polores suddenly called his attention to a clump of trees on the shore some little distance away, which was easily seen by thehelp of the glow of a distant campfing.

"Can you see some strange figures 1 ike men moving about?" she questio gurs tioned.

"Yos. I do ."

"Well presently you vill see one of them throw up his hands and full.Our sharpshooters will get him. Those Glandelinian gamiers are too reckless. They expose themselves too much. I suppose they're preparing a position to aim a run at our raft. I hat ther're putting into posit ton a min that hig"she formed her ares into a circle."Then the ranges will be given them and they will start towing to shell this raft. They will bit bits raft perhaps."

"I collidat't see how Glandatinians ould be populate up everywhere and have a readiness um in r a readiness so soon." protested Radel If the first might honoughisto however that a Glandelinian swift her so buttury wight have been following its because they alght know whome are, it its no didn't know they were there. A quick pull at the levers sent the raft going as fast as the en gines couldpull it.A great shoot of flame like a rolling cloud passed the raft but overhead but almost scorching those on board from the terrible ha heat. The terrificoloud of flame ever growing bigger was pleared by a narrow margin but inflamable things ob board of the raft caught fits and had to be some ed. Angeline Jennings glanced about and shook her head. The engineer had barely saved the hig craft and its hunan freight. Slowing the pace now, the engineer located a wide stretch of the streamwhere heintended to drive the raft. "I see a highway on shore. "announced the boyscout who was throwing a bunket of water on a smouldering convegs. "Also I hear the noise made by hens. Gress som of us had hetter Guess I'll for age and gets eggs and things. I know scaebody will leave us have them." The boys therefore selected for the forage were sent off in boats.

All the rest were surprised at their short absence. They bure all sorts of provisions, a large number of eggs, and were all back with little delay.

"We were lucky"announced one of the boys. "The house is all shot u p the folks are gone, but there were alot of hens . There were three or four hig cases of eggs and we brought the whole outfit, but left the henc at the gugastion of the girls who do notlike to not then i killed when they egg layers. The sloves were soon lit. Plenty of eggs were available and as no one cared for coffee the will was to be used for drinking. There was this time no need for a likely for anyones appetite. Many of them afterwards declared that they never tasted between warm wilk or eggs on boread. Daring the progress of their meal in this safe spot the sound of cummonading had been very conth continuous. No shells had struck near their position, but one of the girl socuts when onshore foreging had ventued to mount a risingpiece of ground not far from the demilished farm house to make a survey of the situation. She had reported that withthensesing of the hig fire the smoke was thirning but was still too thick to permit of navigation the raft to go back to general Archburgs army. They advised now of getting a little rest for the night, and gladly all of the tired boy and girl scouts availed themselver of this citration and only the numbered mands took their terms of on and off duty by the respective house hours/

Thanks to a constitution inured by practiced hardship, and hard work and many trying experiences and so forth of a mirlscout life and very healthy living and of the prayers from all during the night till morning Gertrude, Angeline and even Penrod Emproved rapidly under the nursing of "Bright mod Mary, and the efforts of the ductor ment by imporor vivian, aided by Radeliffes skilled treatment of the wounded fortrude had suffered. Angeline michee being the least injured improved the fastest. Past Midnight Gertrude had recovered consciousness, and on the early morning the doctor whostayed all night pronounced that in another t day the crisis for Gertrude would be passed, andthat she would soon be sittingup in her had and demanding solid food. Penrod was not so badly injured as feared, but Angeline Richee was recovering shead of him. Indeed Radcliffe and all the rest that morning were the happiest boy and girlscouts probably in the world wo, when at last all the officers were admitted to the heads, he Radclife asked the cause of the primary and what had happened and Penrod told him all.

"Nw T've got some very good news. "he said, when Penrod persisted in asking about the efforts of all on board the raft. "We've attured two boats, sunk six, and have twelve prisoners on board under strong guard. Many of our wounded who recleved their in juries in the battle on the Vantura Red are all back on the job, and we have a strong body of reinforcements hasides."

"You recieved two thousandmore boys and girls."

"A little over said Rac Radcliffe triumphantly."They asked to become members of ours and to you ought to see them working. I guess they feel the enemy certainly have one us alla dity deal to by sending dangerous boy and girlscouts of their sie emong us, and Angeline Jennings in this case is instructing them well. Anyway they know now it was the butt in and Jeff spies whosent that Darger boyscout intoour lines in order to frustrate our purpose. They have gone away from ou camp and its a good thing as it is now too hot for them."

"For Good George"!

""ell I couldn't say that of that sort of a boyscout that strikes girls with his fists, "answered Radcliffs, with a look of scorn in his eyes."But he isn't likely to show his face in general Vivians army again in this locality again, I understand, or hop so anyway. However he and his two companions leftuit campraging mad, and that Targar hoy has gone back to the Glandelinian camps. Well that's the first ofour dangerous enemies far away. And general Vivian has turned out a trump fighting the enemy confronting himat Hangar overtime and making his army move forward victoriously, and it begins to lock as if we will win out after all..."

This was good news. It was still oily in the month of October and it was hoped that in little more than a mon the snow should be coming to put out the big forest fires then raging.

"It tell you George (to Radcliffe") said Angeline michee herself, "It's too late now I'm afraid to think of intercepting those six spies, but next summer we'll ins introduce modern methods and double our efforts to prevent any spies getting any where in the future. If we have been able to showour country wat we have been able to do in the past we're able to do more with mod's help in thatfutire the futures. Then we'll have no diffucity about raising cain with spies and other enemies who try to frustrate us. As to that boyscout Starring he sure struck me good."

, "If he hand't struck you with his fists like that we would not have drawn knives on him."said Penrod."nut to see any one of those boys or any boys striking a girl why heavens that's maddening. We couldn't think when we did draw knives. We never dra drew knives on a fellow boyscout before. But we had to as he had a bad one with him too and we strove to prevent him from drawing it, and finally did not succeed."

"Well now you're talking the way I like to hear" said Radcliffe enthusically. "I tell you Penrod and you too Angeline it sure makes me tired to have spics, and Clandelinian boy and girlscouts doing all this when we could find ways to prevent it. I guess with a for improve ments our sutiation wouldn't be so bad after all."

So they discussed their plans, untill! Jean Saunders accompanied with hor sister minnie, and several other girls came in-Penrod or Angeline had not however asked much about the glandalinian boyscout and Radcliffe had been glad to avoid the subject. It was however Jack Saunders who took it up a minute later having come in with little Jean-He humad and hawed a good deal, n and finally the truth came out. It would be easy nough to get all the Gemini from Angelinia Agathia and also Gingigore or Hendro Dargar, but the quartert of Glandelinian boyscouts would have to be laid by the heels before they could be captured. Of the four Dargar alone had disepoared entirely. "

He might be anywhere among one of the Glandelinian armies, he was always a "ranger" boyscout of the enemy, and wanted by every christian general throughout the war zone. To look for him however would belike looking for a pin in a high grass pasture. General clance was said to have gone into the woods with a big pirty of cavarly to tryand run the boy down but of no use. Simeonia Buvallie was running his his spies everywhere. The chances however of accomplicing much by this means were not therefore hopeful when too many enemy patrols could be encountered to , the boy could have fled to the protection of one of these. Too Gertrude, and the two others well knew that the reput ation of that hoyacart would enable the boy to escape because of the protection giving him by the Glandelinians. It would also be very undignified and revengeful and even ridiculous to go into the enemys lines to try to find Dargar and thrash him because of Gertrudes stab. On the other hand it was still more ridiculous that Tredreck or Jacomia Dargar should be brazing it out within the Glandelinian arnies and doing his boyscout work as if nothing had happened. The situation was certainly amost plexing one. The three child scout lendors had no desire ofpunishing him any further just now, but they meant to deal with him and all the Glandelin ian boy and girlscouts when the oppositunity arose. They meant to even ifpossible rid the very Glandelinian army of them and Darger, and his two chief, companions, but they had a strong reluctance to let even such a matter as being frustrated in theirmission because of this by that boy and meant todeal with him accordingly when the proper time came. In the end Radcliffe went away with theunderstanding, that Gertrude and Penrod and Angelinw were gettingmuch batter since that fatal morning and therefore that was great satisfaction.

"But what strength, whatpower Gentrude, that boy had, to hold out so successfully and desperately against four of you "He said regrettingly as he realized the fact." Do you know Gentrude "he continued thought fully," have often thought that we need many such boys in our ranks and girls too. If I had the strength of that Dargar boy what I wouldn't

To the three child scout officers their recovery was a foretaste of paradize and especially for bashful Penrod. It was won: wonderful for them to see many of the girlscouts whom they loved with all their hearts about their bedside all that sad suffering night long, waiting on him especially while Gertrude had still been unconscious and Angeline too anticipating his wishes untill he felt sahamed to be so suddenly rendered helpless, his pride gone. All that night Bright ryed Mary had been very quiet when the beauty of reviving life was stirring in the injured boys heart and casting a glamour about everything remourseful and humble, very restrained. When the threelearned of the part fittle clorinia had played also in their rescue, and thanked her gratefully, she could not meet. Penrude eyes.

They wondered however when the first day would come when they could leave the cabin and be on duty again and where they could feel the crisp autum air providing the forest fires did not keep up the unusual record breaking heat for that time of the year-Nowaver the birch leaves were already a flaming red,,,, the ators had sprung up profisely everywhere mingled with goldenrod. Yet many spots ever where else everything was in ruin, and yet the three child scout leaders had sometimes the inexplicable sense of having come house.

"Mary Sunshine"he said to I ttle Glorinia"I hope we are going to have better luck in our compaigns in the future!Nevertheless the good will goes with the kindness of all our coarades and friends, even i we still have to go through risky campgisns and the like."

she broke down.

"That must you think of the carry now!" she cried.

"I think"began Penrud.

She sprang to her feet facing him.

"That that Starring boyscut and all his followers know of the plan we were upon toeven learn the details and causes of the Abbieton dissats, and clour efforts to capture those six spies. Yes they did know but only alittle while before we started. And listen—I was on my way to warn you, and Gertrude, and Ange, the , that Starring and his two contributions Tredrick and Darger were three of those six spies when my hose holted, and the shock of the fall made me forget for the moment afterwards. Then it was too late. An explosion scared the horse."

Her words flung a great hunden from the minds of the three. They have not been able to reconcile the thought of anything else but that those three Glandel inian by south had been mainly guilty of the conspiracy, with his knowledge of them and all the vhistian boy and girlar arts. Yet Penod himself realized that his own att tude had been one rather that one who condnes an offense than of acquirel.

"I iss sure that you, and Gertrude, and Richees could not have known -- at least I knew for sure you did not know, ,,. At frat

I believed that Starring was incapable of such a crime. But he was one of the spice onaployed by that 'but fellow. I then after you were hurt, I couldn't have the chance to tell you, and that is why I was so very unhappy."

She raised her head and met their eyes at last."And T was on my way to ask you not to try and capture Starring because I knew he meant to kill you if you interfered, and he's three times as strong as the three of you. We is an avariatous, greefy Glandelinian by scout, and he would have been an accomplice in even the destruction of the Vivian cirls if it wasn't that their beauty so fascinate them, even though he and they too are the hitterest of enamiss."

"I presumed once"began Angeline Richee,,,,, quietly, though her heartbegan to suddenly hammer,2,?."To ask you a question about the small spy called the personality of the "Jeff" fellow in the Funnies. Whether he meant more for the Glandelinian generals thou the bigger fellow or whether he was the main one. I decided to ask it again."

"He's got all Glandelinian generals doing as he advises" she said in whisper. "The higger fellow who'resumbles with never meant so much and couldn't do a thing if it wasn't for his leader the smaller fellow. I know it now- and since the day I have learned so much about then, they don't act like Mutt and Jeff in the "funnies, and neither are they any true individuals. They're worigen, they'll work for any nation to get the money. And they charge enough to get rich too. They're very dangerous of course, but their character thank God in one way is not half so evil. They do it only for the money. Refuse to give them anything and they wouldn't care what happened a to a Glandelinian array."

"Her breath came quickly as she spoke, she was afraid of these two dangerous International spies.

"I have since I ever entered the army said Penrod loved all of you deer girlscouts as if you were all sisters to me and as he said this he held her hand fast-she did not try to disengage herself but she was trembling, and he could not see her face.

"Golrinia tell me---"

He was conscious of a stuperious fear, all the fug future hung upon the situation, and still she gave no sign.

"Wh won't you be able to tell me when Gertrude and I and Angeline will be able to be up and around again.?"

"At that"she raised her head,,, and flung it back with a proud gesture, and locked, into his eyes."

"Poor Gertrude will be the longest in the bed, and how we love her and wish her in command Penrod"she answerred with pride and misery combined that forehade denial or coquetry. And "And you Penrod have always been loved by all of the girlscouts, and lack told me recently little Jean Gertrude, and Angeline Richee loves you best."

However now Penrod feared no longer. Everything was changed to joy that seemed to blaze about him lighting up the derimess of the smoky day. For a long time the night before nothing had been known. Now she remembered what she had to say, something very important.

"I should have told you. "she said; "The waiting will be quite long before either of you are up again. The doctor couldn't never consent of you getting up too soon. You'll be sure to be here for weeks."

"" ll we will have to stay here. "said Penrod lightly.

But she was very serious now, and Penrod had to full into her moud. "What has the Glandelinian boy and girlscouts got against us, we never depredated on them." Suid Penrod. "And as for that us boy and rilscouts who fights for such a hely cause surely can justifying themselves in defending the right of the children of their own country. These Glandelinian boy and girlscouts fight more for gain and honor and praise than for country and cause. I know it."

"It is not that Penrod. It is because, well because you yourself are an American that makes the Glandelinians hate you so bitterly. The Glandelinians does not love the for igners that goes on the side of the christians, and they hate christian for igners the most. The at is what drove Glandelinian beyoccuts and girls too to break their 1 pledge and drive war upon us by their own. He believes that for igners betray Glandelinia to the world, that is Starring does. That Gerold Starring is the main danger to us all."

"I don't know how, but I sure had no hand in it. General Greatheart adopted me when he was on a tour in Canada and brought me over here. But Glandal inia is dreaded by every nature in the world. If you only knew what Candadathinks of clandalinia you'd open your eyes in wonder. You see alorinia after Faperor vivian took Calverinia uills from general Monley ad Germaine vivian at the buttle of Abbienm or Geroniam Greek we French and Faglich in Condada cherished the hope that the christians could regain all of Calverinia again. Even there were Glandelinians who held high offices in Canada and they were heverloyal to us and God and hoped the same thing, saying that Glandelinia's war was very wixked. Then when the news came of apprentprogress of Glandelinia and of Glandelinia holding Calveriniaunder her sway, Starring heard of the conduct of many foriegners especially Trench, German and English who had come over here at leaset for sight seeing at first, now joiningour ranks. And therefore all Glandelinia generals resents it and broods under it. You were the first foriegn boy to be brought here to be can become a boyscout, and that made Gerald Starring declare war against us."

"But that is all Tom Toolery"said Penrod. "As a key to conduct the antuquarian motives of Gerald Starring appear impossible."

"Not to Gerald Starring"answared answered the girlscout sadly.

"You don't know how crampedour lives are here sometimes in such dangerous campaigns, and how old things and memories are chrished and preserved at risk of manyl ives and injuries and suffering nd sorrw to many of us. And then my own fathers broading over these things and worrying as to my own safty arises very often. He is a general also his name is Oliver Warkuwhs r., Glorinia and he has g fought a number of bloody battles and Elways won. Once he was wounded badly and blinded for a time and his life was despaired of, but he was brought back to health and his sight restored. He however. E he not yet returned to the ranks as his dotor won't let him. For my sake I hope he never will."

"My father is very good, and very just "said said very tenderly/
"But he is violent in tempr against the enemy, and lets the situation of the war take hold of him too much. He wants Glandelinia removed from the map of the world forever, he wants Abbieann back, he loves his land an d God far better than he loves even me-- at least I believe he looks on me as anacessory of it. "She hesitated. "Penrod"she continued presently "That is how it was arranged that Gerald Starring wasoto go for St with his own boys and girls and to try and prevent our own efforts at any costs."

Penrod and Angeline Riches essily noticed her unwillingness to pronounce the Glandelinian hoyscouts name.

"It is because he haska greatpull in the Glandelin ian ranks, and too if he would ever succeed in frustrate any attempt on our part we'd just die from the shock of it that's all. We got a more dangerous camy in him than ay an of the spies or the Glandelinian generals. Radel ffe knows Gerald Starring more than any of the enemy generals do. The boyscout Radcliffe became more and more suspicious of that boys efforts, and learned that the Glandelinian rascal schemed often to get hold of the Vivian Girl Princesses and to destroy us all if it was possible. He wanted to be the chief of all boys couts in the clandelinden army, but he found that high in rank as he had become, he couldn't attain the rank he had desired as were Glandel but Glandelinian girlsout recieved a still nigher rank. So he set to work, won the confidence of those twoydangerous "International Spies, and got them to try to do us out of our own too. We seen to be in histower even though he is a hoyscout. We have tried to do every thing to apprehend him ifpossible. But we need more clever boys and girls than he is. We all felt obliged to Radeliffe for he had accomplishedmach by his long terms of Tying work. I knew nohing of met of Radoliffes work because I was at a girlscout school in Angelinia Agathia at the time. But when I come to july the ranks after my mothers death by the hand of a foe my father was in the army and found out the boyscout. He tried to capture the boyscout himself by trying to disguise as a Glandelin ian officer and servivin g force a time on pretension. "e could only bring himself to do this because he knew that some day the Glandelinian boyscout must be captured, and all the rest of his little devils would go ad we all should haveour better times again. But he cedel more spies to help him. So he get the Semini, and they failed too --and---that's all Penrod escent tosay that although it was expected that he would come within our ranks diguised or not to try and do us harm though at first I never expected he could do so.My own father knew the danger all of us were in, and he wanted me to set the day to make a desperate campaign againstb All Glandelinian child adouts and try to run them out of the Glandelinian army. But it was all like a dram to me-- a very bad dream, as T know now .-- T could screwn from it, and without the advice of violet and her sisters I could never bring myself to consent on such a dangerous mission. It used to make my father afraid however for my safty in becoming a Ranger as he said it was more safer in other secut ranks. He that is Gerald Starring hates you so much Penrod, and he is also jealious of you---he seemed to devine--and he caused or accused Canada and the United States of sending you over here to kill him. That is what made me so angry at all the Glandelinians. And he told me that you entered the christian service by means of a pull and that you wished to only make a gain by writing me an inguiting letter. It was not true for I knew you secretly ever since you was brought here by General "eldonia Greatfheart your Foster Father, I knew it could not be true. But the lying words hurt me, and because of that I tried to hate the Glandelinians more-and all the time when I was away from the ran's on other forced duty I-used to think about you, and wondered howyou got slong with the Princesses whom you served so nobly---and I was afraidindeed I was afraid when you went out there to expose yourself for that cowardly Englishman at Delights Junction, for I saw you."

"I think I did a rach thing at the time but I'm here yet. "Penrod

"I think I did know." she answered softly. "And I tried to hate the Glandelinians, before even I know there was a hoyscout called Gereld Starring, because too of the folly of the Glandelinian cause,, and the wickedness of it. It was absurd I thought, and it engered me to think that my heart should be at the mercy of such a wicked cause as Glandelinia's. "

"Noes that Gerald Starring kn ow ofour decision?"asked Penrod his brow blackening.

She nodded. "T told Radcliffe when I discovered Geralds wicked design against all of us. Thad always been hypnotized by my sense of duty t my country. But Penrod remember this -- her cheeks glowed and shelouked very earnestly at him"If your love of coury and God is as true as ours and mine, and as unswerving as ours, you can remain happy in the knowledge that we all do love you too. Your love ofour country and its cause has been shown too. Nothing can alter our love of any boyscout whether he be Abbieannian or a citizen unless we find his love is not a true one. And although thin gs may go wrong and perils become greater I will never give up my attempts to cause Geralds capture -- never Penrod."

. She was now crying softly, her cheek against his shoulder. Penrod took her in his arms as he had done many other friendly lovable girlscarts. Now in the light of Mary's story, which recalled Radcliffes forgotten one he could intrepet the dangerous situation all were facing unknowningly. But with the realization of this he felt on in dignation that swept away all other impulses save theone which urged him to go when he could before general "ivian and tell him the truth, defy the enemy to the last.

"I'm going to report this dangerous situation to violet and her sisters as soon as I am able. "he said.

She started out of his arms.

"Penrod you must not. It would kill them to know."

"out it is our duty to let them know Mary. Don't you see nothing is to be goined by delay or keeping this awful situation a secret from them. It is our duty that they should know. We can tell Pumpror Vivien and he'll tell them."

"And that dangerous Starring boyccout will fight you to the bitter end for it."

"But T shall not be off my guard. What harm can that little devil do me?"

"Listen first" she said as she sat on his bed near the pillow"The other day, before we startedout up here general Wivien bluself went down to the Tu Flamingo scouts in his own command. He gave them considerable and good advice. He told them that they owed just as much duty to the ranger scouts as they did to him. It was because he loved us all Penrod and they didn't seen to join or communicate with us in anything we did but from dread kept in the background. General Wi i Vivian thinks it is their duty to sacrifice themselves for us too. So we never must gie up Penrod dear."

He laughed andput his arm about her.

"I can't believe Gerald Sterring willslways go on like that, just because we want to fight sostrong for the cause. No dear Mary, we must tell waperor vivian, but not to day perhaps as I'm not in any condition to do so. Put you see with less than three mon the more we can't drift any longer . I feel the war is going to assume terrible proportions and we'll have to keep our eves open."

she siched. "I supose you are right,, Penrod, "she said. "But then what will happed happen to us. ?"

Ts the st situation very bad ... ???????

"It is not the situation Penrod."It is the principal. Our situation is not so bad. But the Glandelinian child scouts are twenty to thirty that more numerous and stronger in healty means and weapons than we are--and if they ever get the upper thand I don't know what will become of us. Few of our own kind of children care to be come scouts and wielet and her sisters dreads the idea of drafting any one for the ranks. Penrod, our own whole total number of child scouts throughout the whole country entirely is only a hundred and fifty thousand. And think twenty or thirty times that many of the enemy."

Pe rPerrod looked glum. "Th

"I don't know what we can do he said!"

"Isn't there any chance of raising that many?"asked Angeline

"There isn't not ance of raising that many unless violet and her sisters can find means"Put in Gertrude Angoline for the first time. Tt seems as if it isour turn to despair. If they draft any it would 3 31

Trongs"
"The and there's another thilly said Angeline Riches. "If we draft boys the another waild and girls for scout work, so would the enemy do the mane. Drafting would not help us none."

"Are you sure though?" Penrod asked"That sucha sacrifice is worth ounteffort. !I would feel like a beast to force children to become scou's when we're usually in as much danger as the soldiers are mayby mera danger. To force little boys and girls into our service;"

"But it's more dangerous for children outside the ranks, at loast so we're a hundred per cent safer. "said Gertrude." "How cone!"

"Don't you remember the frightful massacres of children of the past and while still occur sometimes right now!"

It was Mary's turn to be surprised . "I a am sure we all love every one ofour child friends and comrades"she finally enswered"and from that fact, to makeour small r brethren to sacrifice themselves into the scout force against their will, and when many of them might be control for wond; moveand mayby sinful and we wouldn't do wrong herounder any conditions even, if we had to all die. A : to there is such work to break them in, to educate them into the driller of the scout force, and the army too would permit them men they are too little. You know eight in the younges youngout accepted and this of a next to get in at that age and those who do have a palle"

So they resolved tong an artisor, smeat it, to tell Empror Mivian of the situation as soon as o portunity presented itself, and to wait. though the waiting for something to eventuate which would resolve the unusual difficulty seemed useless. Only a miracle could save all christin boy and girlscouts from being frustrate of to hand dangerous clandelinian no, and girlscouts and their grauping hands. There too had been one thing that puzzled Penrod for a long, long, time and new it stayed in 14 horists and reald not leave him Why and it was using a G Trish man called Junes Glancy to organize a Gemini of his own to try and oust the Vivia. Brand of the A. Irana territory and the Reg Bongall State, and why was it a big army under Myleton or . To se mear what was left of Abbicanniumy did not either one of them balk at murder of all armies if possible " e fact, creached this subject with " ary florinia who looked at him in wonder.

"I never thought of ig it in that way"she answered lowly. "I thought it wasjust that Municipal and a, just sensed that we christian copied barlactute were going to be getting the best of him too far to make nis langs, and he'd give anything to have us all destroyed. He calls us the "Human plague."

"So we are a human plague. Well wo'll make him think we're worse. " used Penrod."Te 're not as mach a plague as he is to us. Tut I don't credit him nor any of hu his generals with quite so much unusual things as that and somehow I fancy there must be a deeper reason"

As he concluded 'ary stopped suddenly and clutched his arm in agatition. Outside in front of the cabin stood a tail general and he was talking to the boy and Arlscout officers on the out side. Then he suddenly whooled and cause in. His rage and concorn over something which he made little effort to hide was putent. It was pitfully clear that he was the depended man in the christian army.

Jack and Jean were about to enter but when they saw the general inside the cubin they hesitated.

"Come in Jack and Jean"said Mary turning to them. You will excuse me

I.am sure"she added to Gertrude and the others.

"No declared the general"It will be just as well that we all understand the situation. Everybody knows me as a great general, and therefore I speak without concealment to any one who cares to listen to me. So Glandelinian boyacouts have been giving you and your conrades trouble eh Gertrude, and your two friends!Because you try to capture one of the snea ing little spics and pledge breakers he alleges a plut to murder you?"

"ithout answering him for the coment Gertrude turned to Mary, and Jack and Tean.

"If My Uncles business is with me alone no doubt you three will excuse us for the present. "she said.

"It ain't with you alone."said General Aronburg. "I was just telling my opinion of that Glandelinian boyscout the same as I'd tell may Glandelinian general no matter who or what he was. "It is with you Penrod"he continued addressing the boy himself. And it ain't private. Private! Diable, it's too public. What has happened here I has made all of us the laughing stock of every Clandelinian general in the war for I found this out. Every one has heard that you Gertrude. you too Penrod, and even you Jean, and Angeline Richee have been killed by Starring Now Starring will get a complesion for a murder a two doublemurder he never committed. "hy? I have kept it quiet as long as I thought it was just a whime but it seems it ain't! Why! Have all of you boy and girlscouts changed. Are there too many dangerous Glandelinian boy and girlscouts. When you make a bargain with the, Vivian Girls stick to it. You four should now diguise yourselves as some body else and let the scoundrels believe you're dead and you'll have less molestation."

"Your Excellency"protested Jack"Te boy and girls do not break our pledges. What ever h we boy and girlscouts have con tracted to do will be and has been done. Why did the Glandelinian child scouts break their pledges. But this is hardly the occasion, or the monner --- "

"I know it ain't said general Aronburg subsiding slightly,, ad and Penrod felt "ary's hand which had gripped his arm tightly to hold his attention relax its tension. "aybe I forgot myself. I don't want to be anythin g but a gentleman to anyhody who are good and friends of ours and in the presence of little ladies especially, but its hard Gertrude my dear neice, when everything is as good as settled to have it again put back into the meltingpot. Heaning Gerald Starring and his "landelinian boy and girl scouts. I don't see where they should come into this interfering business. Then you Gertrude were brought here and said to be dying, which I hoped would be a mistave I was almost frantic as you are all I have besides your disguised sister. And when all my officers began to talk excitedly about a glandelinian be scout whipping four of you, and striking little girls in the face with his fists and then using knives on little girls it is more than flesh and blood could stand."

The general lookedpitifully distressed. His face flushed with resern resentment was was also soulded into importre importance by conflicting impulses. The general stepped foward.

"T am sure general"said Pearod trying tosit up in hed that the Glaudelinian spiesput those claudelinians child scorts upto this. Those two International spies are more guilty than others and you know too sir those secrets those rescals know about Abbiesnn. "ary I suggest that you and the general have a quiet talk together. I know that you hold yor word as sacred as we girl scouts plways de and us boys too have always held our word."

fary was a pale as death but she stood foward bravely.

"I'm sure the Glandelinian javinile scouts never pledged anything with us though it had been rumored they did. "she said in allow tone.

"Are you sure you know what you're saying!" the genral asked. "I sure do. "s girl and boyscouts have been misled, and have ta'en too much for granted. We all made amistake. I remember when the Storring buy and his two main companions treacheriously conspired to cause general Clancy to cut up genral Hansons army at the battle of Lebanon, when the they planned the assassination of the general and Violet, and her sisters, they lost watever chance they had to even get within Hansons lines. We are frustrated, hoodwinked. He knows all our plans and intentions. He knows a good deal about the disaster at Abbieson tou." General Aronhurg staggered backward, come up against the table, and stood staring at her in incredulity, in feer, end then in fury his own face whiter than her's Jack sat down in the chair heavily, seeming to collage there. He looked about him in bewilderment. as if he did not true, his nearing. Then general Aronburg flung his fear asile and laughed, and it was the most terrific h lagh that anyone had ever heard. He addressed Penrud.

"T understand new"he sneered. "T at fine Glandelin ian boysout hus been at work in this matter. Ithis he who had been or isone of those six say as completes of the "att fellow whom the Orincesses wished to have captured. I don't bisme my neice then for drawing a knife when he strike Angeline Riches. Inder i I don't blame you Penrud nor Jean either. And I expect my little neice to be true to her country assent is to God and me no more or no less. T'll take care of all the love. I ain't a hard man. I can make all sorts of efforts for human nature. I expect to bring you another troop by and by as I know you'd do this same to me. But this is different Penrod"he shouted furiously brandishing his fist into the air. "He's benn trying to break down my anales too. That little Glandelinian comp and also the Professionals had been the case of Myletzes army coming up here for the purpose to try to crush my amy and ruin me. He wants Myletze to drive meant of the Abbieann territory. However I'm not the man to allow that. I hope every one of you know what I .e mean. I'll deal with Myletze and all his generals as soon as I can get my army up there. I'll make him see an adversary that with the help of God he cannot heat if he has whipped others. But are you girls and boys going to continue your dangerous campaign tward Abbiean, or are you not! Better follow my army in its advance if you intend to do so. You know what's it going to cost you all if you take a chance without a protecting army near you."

"Wa'll go along with the advance of your array"put in Penrode "We'll all go "enouted Jask."We mit have a chance. "e'll make Geralu Swaring see as in our true light. Te have always kept our ledges why didn't he."

"And I'll get at Myletze ad clear Abbieann terri territoy of the energy for good"said the general as hemoved too the dier "ou have aide. The the second that are need and gains, you're better then even ans soldiers. "e'll show the enemy that we can be all "Good devile". The malignant smalle upon his face seemed frozen there giving hum and wayed, of a sawyrs mask. The Lieuvenant whom they had taken abourd to give a ride on the raft had a look of agony and shape that was the most vivid of the po picture. Tack and Mary and also Jean stood Tike at t statues besite the door watching the general made his way down the raits decks. Jack put his ame shout Jean supporting hereller sea - de rage was gone, and she was weeping uncontrollably. Penod astohed the three with an inscrutable face. We waitied untill Joan had released herself and stood facing him by his bed. Then he burst out in pussionate words.

"Unless we do something everything to us will be all gone."ne colled. "And everyone of us will be out of existence. The countrys cause is nearly everything to us but we need more help. Jean and Mary.Our Boy Socut Regisents dome means little enough now, but it never shall he hoodwinked by any of the Glandelinians. "He raised his clenched fist and shock is in the air with a passionately dramatic gesture be if to register his wow. Wis face was atmosphing the red with red

"I offer you my humbl s humblests regrets for what has occured because of those Glandelinians penrod"said Jack. "There was a time when I should have exacted personal regultal. To alas we can only do out test to hear the cross, and the b r burden."

"But as for you Jack, you who fortunately came herevin an evil day to help as cut down the energyspurposes of the past you who are one of the best boys, what have you to say alout Gerald Starring wh c has almost bought this ruin upon us all."!

Jean started forward as If to protest to such a question but he silenced her with a gesture of his open hand.

"I ask you what you have to say over the stuation we're in Jack"he repa repeated. "I ask you how we can justifyourselves and form a 'otter movement, you who are one of the bast 'oysouths in our ranks(spanks') and have often presumedupon the fact that you knowlets about those Glandslinian boysouts."

"Starting knows about ourplans of the Abbi ann se x searches."answers

Jack simply.

The words seemed to sting Penrod to the autok.

"That Glandelinian boysout is presumt presumptions Jack"he ordd, "Perhaps he too thinks that we are already beaten in our work--or that after we three have been so hadly wounded will givenpthe carpaign and all go home."

Jean cried out, and laid her hand appealingly upon Penrods and, he however did not repulse her, and continued speaking as if he were not conscious of her presence.

"We shall never give up any compaign. Of course the Glandd inians have one enough horn to us, Jack. Then I am well again I will put the raft at my own disposition, and go forth for Abblican and discover the cause of the destruction there, or die. And henceforward unless we can claim our own efforts to a success—we hope to see no mure of those Glandelinian boyscuts."

"Every thing that has happened to our country and its good righteous people is very unjust "cried Mary Glorinia." "very body in this Country leves not as much as the Saints throughout the world does, and do. There exist no reason why Glandslinia cannot be proven of the guilt for we know she destroyed Abbiesna. We know that the Mutt and Jeff Spics were at main conspirators of it all. Abbiesna was as good ax city as any other and yet it is no more."

"They are the con spirators even though it cannot be proven. "could Penrod." That business have they here. "Glandelinia is not their country. They're for ignore ad have notesiness serving a cause they don't even know wheat just for the cake to gain money and secure their own call selfish ends."

"They are responsible for the destruction of Abbicann."cried Gortrade. "Uncle told so that long ago."

"And they're not Clandelinians eff her. "retorted Jack botly. "That's why they're wanted worst than anyone."

"Yes and he and his companion were not too proud to pledge the christian countries to the morey of Clandelinia and her whime, who is a nation whom now the whole world fears and hates because of what she had done and is still! doing. Everythingingpoined without our knowledge."

d done and is still! doing. Myerythinghapponed without our knowledge."
"They have done enough so thome."cried Penrod botly."And it'll never be a past."

"Yos andthe memory is not past. Those crass International spledged us to Glandelinia and placed the firstlinks of chain about the neeks of our country of Calverinia hoping that the understanding, to which she was no party would gradually one coush Calverinia, cause her a sepure and passession, that the country should be one a part of Glandelinia and memonics us still wore, and save Glandelinia so she could dominate the whole world."

Penrod turned on her a lock in which humilation structed with unger. He seemed stupified by her statement that is Jeans Jack interposed. "Penrod we all levecur Matice Scuntry, and we all intend to stay and stick to our work through thick and this." He saldogle calmly. Put "But I realize your failings Peerod, and I realize how great a shock it has been though I didn't think you'd feel it this way being of Toriogniarth. That proves your leve for the country that has adopted you. You decide to go through with it when you're well. Believe may we all wish you were well enough now, and Gentrade, and Augustic too. But we shall return see day and see general Vivana, all senior again I appearance as now no resear, no valid reason; for Genald Starring and his accomplices;;;;;;;;;;

Penrod, Lesing all self centrol. "The day when he and his companions showed their traces braches locally methods to the "ivian firls and caused them to be separated and taken far away andone of them to be under that coineded confounded Augustine St flace was even the most evil day of my own life. To could be missed of the trip even in The not well enough to sit up. To 'll see to 12 he'll tounte us no longer."

Penrod then raised his roice, and shouted;

"On Angeline Jone's Jeneinys. On Angeline Jennings....."

From outside on the rait but from the far rear of its a quavaring dry snawared blue. Indied soon through the Journay of the cable Angeline Riemmings entered and stocked at the salute. Jean herself case up to Jack settly, andplaced her fingers on his and, livit looking into his face withinly.

"We will go shead with the campaign"she said. The "The whole situation had been a term b termible blow to him. Sometimes I'm afraid for everything. I shall tell you later on; --- "

"Angeline" said Penrod" lack has decided much to my satisfaction to sum assume command of the boyscouts in my steed until I'm well enough to take the graduant you will have the goodness to prepare everythingpossible for him so he will know how to take the full responsibility you too will see to it that the endineer moors the maff here untill memoral Aronhurgs army moves northward. We are soing to follow him tward Abbienm."

The leader of dirlacouts nuttered acquiescence and walked away. Jack turned tward Penrod. Frankly he heldout his hend. But Penrod did not seem to see the gesture. He lay staring at the open doorway, and Jack saw a small man brought in, one haid clutching his spreading coller and his face was purple as if hewas strangling. The girls cried out in fear and the man would have fallen heavily to a chair had not the boys who we brought him held him. His dyes closed his arms dropped over his ades, his head fell on his breast-Jack ran to him.

"He's shot by a Glandelinian sniper on on shore"said one of the hoys who had brought him in. "Shot in the lung."

The non was an officer. He was unconscious. The three hoys tried to rake a him to carry him to an empty sofm, but thr man seemed made of iron as he lay, a deed weight in their arms. At the cry of the girls the sl soldier guard had come in. As he perclaved the soldier lying in the chair he began to utter wild whimpering cries. He panted up to him, ben over "bent over him, kan kneeled took his hands in his." "He's bedly wounded by a shot "hemseled took his sure;"

"Help me get him into the next roum, into a bedwaad Jack. The guard did not seem to understand, but he aided the boys to raise the wounded officer, and the four of them helf dragged helf carried him into the next cabin roum, and laid him on the cot. Hery and Jean knelt on each ade of him, their hands clasped, their eyes strained on his face. Jack was loosening his collar and the unperpart of his clothing to find the wound. The guard had gon sout to call for help.

"Oh he's our best man, a good guide. They've killed him. Those snipers havekilled him"cried Jeen in published pathetic grisf. "They have killed him!

Jack sould do nothing. She seemed distribute, and the soldier lay like a fallen tree, and his rettling breaths blended with the little rirls sobs, and there was no other sound in the room, seeing hearing the sound came in sew, and explained where the sniping had done. "Locate the sniper, and for heavens make GFT him whispered Jack. "You have keen sharp eyes, no some fake movement to draw his fire, and get him with a grapeshot."

"T will." and the boy was out.

The guard case in with the doctor Mary herself had brought up a basin and a little shrp knife. A towel was on his arm. She mattered something something to Jean, who rose from herkness andlooked at Jack with a brave effort at self companies.

"She is going to bleed hims "she said. We always bleed such wounded courades so you kn ow yourself for that's the only hope. It's the only chance while the doctor works over the wounded to see what nature it is."

Jack feeling helpless and forlorn took the luncet from Harys hands and looked at the edge as she said "Boil the instrument fast Jack. You know how to do it well."

"Can you get some hot water?" asked Juck on of a boyacout coming "Boiling water! Why yes. There's some at hand right near. I'll get it."

And he hurried to obey. He came back with a pan of stemming hot water. Sack watched the two little girls in great lwe and addiration at their courage and selfpossession as she they went to end fro intent upon their task. While the water was boiling over a stove two man had been surround by the doctor and they put the wounded officer into a cubin bed...:!"..!!

When the water was boiled sufficiently enough Jean sterilized the lancet, and then handed it to Mery, whose little fingers which were shaky before grew fun as die performed theoperation. When it was over and the arm and the wounded which was near the shoulder bun daged .Then as the dotor toosrose a slight importement in the wounded mans cons condition seemed already manifest. But the doctor shock his head. "Mortal wound. "he said regretfully. "Only a miracle will save him. The bullet went through near the heart."

."I should like tostay if I can be of help"said Jean.

She spoke doubtfully for she felt that if the man was mortally wounded she could do little, and in view i of the wounding of three child scout leaders, and this added burden the situation second worse. George yet too had not succeeded in locating the sniper.

"I think we'd better so back into the other room with Gertrude and the others said Angeline Jennings owe all must be very careful of owselves. We'll have some one take care of him and have Hasses said for his Recovery."

She put an arm around Jean and Jaci, (Mary Stayed with the man) and said"This incident makes us love each other and the countrys cause all the more"and she kissed them both.

It was evdent as Angeline Jennings paced the length of the rafts decks that she was greatly disturbed, in deed she was angry. At length exhausted, she returned to her cabin wearily sank into her chair, and then a hoyacout entered and announced her sister. Dolores Addressed her:

"I see your wearied Angeline. It's a real treat indeed to find you here slone. There are so many things wi which I wish to speak to you about . We are going to hold a meetin g right after breakfast all of us officers and we are so enxious to have you head it and Jack will be president. Can we count on you sister dear . We feel there is so much you can do to help us. Your exertence too has been so great. The demands of the whole Chlverinia for help during the past sixmonths have increased sorapidly that we ouselves facing so many perils are a scarcely able to cope with conditions as they exist to day. Will you attend the meeting. ?"

"Yes I will he glad to go."

The meeting started with the Lords Prayer and several others was a very animated one.Brilliant girl and hovecout leaders and all the privates, all attended, and all advanced their theories for handling the stuation, hoodwinking the energy and soforth, in deed of handling a situation of the whole war which had become terribly colossal in in its proportions. Angeline Jenningslistened attentively to the speakers. Their arguments appealed to her, and yet at time it seemed to her and others too, she could detect a tone of sorrow, of disconsgement of want of lack of despair, shewas aroused from her absorption by a clapping of hands, for her name had been called. Graciously, and dignifiedly she took her place on the speakers stand and after they all saluted her she looked about her.

"First"she said "I want to thank all of you my best friends and comrades for asking me to lead the meeting today. I deem it both a pleasure and a privilige. There islittle I can add to what has already been said. But our management of the expedition who we have planned is worthy of the highest recommendation. There is justone suggestion would like to make and I hope no one will feel I am over stepping my efforts in making it . It is this; "The situation is unusual, We are facing conditions proceed by the war to day that would have staggered all historians of the past. It is theold ago horor. Glandel inia's war had become a business of destruction of all children . It is for this I blead that we all so through with or commpign for the discovery of the cause can the disaster at Athieson no matter wht obe obstructions are confronting us. We know Glandelin is is guilty, but we want proofs to expose her."

There was a clapping of hands and a most hearth heart felt applause as she took herplace.

In the meantime most of the boy and mirlscouts had heard more firing far away in the distance. They wondered if it was any con tinuat ion of a or the same battle, or whether it was a new one starting sunewhere else as they believed they were too for usuay to hear the buttle raging along general Viviens lines.

"I hear more firing" said the boy scout,, Ned. "I'll bet it's a new battle starting. "replied Jack."

"My goodness see that hig long line of wagons and autos and men and nuns out there on shore. They're headed southward but opposite general Aronhurgs shore.. Maybe we'd better move on a little. They're Glandelinians. I don't believe this cove is his enough to his us from them."

"They're going past prety fast." "Hut in the boy scout Jimmie.

"Yes those fellows with the College Student hats are headed N orthcand not south. "put in Henry. I believe they're zimmermannians. "aded the boy in astonichment.

"I guess guess you're right Henry. "Jane Mollfort agreed. "How dos It happen. Whose arry is 14*"

"I know opoke up Harry Andreas "To rikbe on tolo we are In making our trip we came close to where Myletze must have his army on the coposite shore. We are probably therefore close to his army. And what I've heard of his army we'd hetter look out. They're not like the Manleys. Manley is nothing compared to Myletze."

"I wish it was bree kfast time"soid "ildred. "I'm hungry. "I wonder when it is ready. ?"

"We got an hour yet. We're up earlier than usual this morning. But why don't you get a small lunch"advised Jane.

"If we have a chance we ought tochange clothes and wash our old ones before the christian army advances, and hang them uptodry. That adventure we had made us all -- oh --- so dirty."

"There's be a nice close line handy if it wasn't so far on shore on the enemy side. "announced Hildred. "See it!"

She pointed to a long bress wire suspended,, over on the shore not very far from the ground.

"hat's that!"demanded Jane looking astonished."I' ve never seen that kind of wire before. !

"It looks brand new"said Mary Stanck also looking at the with her fiel. glasses."I wonder what in the world it can be and what it is doing there. Oh I know "she cried. "It's an enemymailitary pip ne line. I've a mind to bring it down with a good shot of grape and danister."

"That would be a nice idem."Jirmie laughed. "Hello Centrail Catach a big bunch of little"christian doggieschere Hello.Hello Wrong number oh all right----Oh looke girls see the nice big waron coming ·long, and no officer near. It's full of soldiers too."

All of those on deck turned to lok look shoreward, at a wagon whose horses were tearing along at a rapid pace. However one of the front wheels struck a hole, wrenched an anie lurched heavily to one side and then stopped before topoling over as the driver had shouted frantically to the horses(three) to halt.

Several men in the uniform of ifficers, suprently so chich generals jumped quickly from the machine. A number of men also came out of the wagon. One of them a sergment produced from the wagon a case from which he took a set of telephones. Se stepping to the side of the road and attatching a clamp to the wire, wildred had discovered, he pushed a long brass pin into the ground and began a conversation. Mildred touched Joy St Claires arm.

"Get out out joy" she exclaimed. "Maybe we can get some information.

It must be of importance to us."

"I'll try but I don't know though, whether our phone would work here"she answered. However though they did find their phone worked all right, they could not make out much information because the officers spoke in a code language that sounded for ispn.

"It is in German"said wildred"Go Joy call George.He'll understand."

George was summoned and he listened.

"They're going to play a trick on general Aronburg"he said. "The fellow said something show us too, and I know Myletze is making a long detour er und Archburgs army to try and flunk him out of his position. Possibly he is telling Myletze of the ruse."

"Must be some dignatary if he can also get a troop of cavurly whenever his wagon breaks durn"continued George. "Suy "he continued "Suppose we capture the wholecutfit. They look easy. There's no n one

"Go as far as you like George. "Mildred agreed. "There's is a good chance. We'll have guns ready tward shore if there's any help at hand

In a moment deorge was leading an expetition of boyscouts and girls toc. nothing was as men after that but twenty minutes later, the child scouts were coming back in the boats in a rounabout way and they had the o ficers and men with them. They were soon ob board.

"Onto the raft, and helpycurselves to the cabin ware we have sume of your comrades"George cried. "So you were going to hag ust . Well we have you begged. Good thin g we overheard your convergation.

General Archings knows the movement already for he's been signalled

The prisoners looked sullary as they were placed into the other cobinnd and a stronger ward placed. However bfore breakfast, the soldiers were first given something to eat, and then under guard of soldiers transa transfered to the christian side of the store to be brought to Breakfast time soon came for the hos and dirls and accordingly they fall too with vigor. It was noticed that the officer whom they had given the rds on the a raft was a tall man of commanding apparance for they had not recognized him during the night, and whose well knit figure showed years and years of hard training,,, and he did not sent himself as all the rest did upon the floor of the raft,,, but remained standing. His stern yet kindly face he hore evidence of nights and days of great anxiety. And the koon eyes seemed to tak take in every detail. The hove and girls at once felt a liking to this general. After all had been supplied, with a plateful of bacon and eggs, n and stewed chicken, with glasses of a ilk and coffee for those who used it, Angeline Riches addressed the lender in an a effort to be of assistance to himas he did loke rried shout squething. "you have had had some experiences during your many trips on this long raft. "he said to Angeline Jennings

"Yes indeed"was the reply "Even now while waiting for general Aronhurg to advance we shall be delayed for some time."

"you sure have a good raft boat here" clunteered the officer"ind if you care to accept I can have a goodly supply of long range ,achine guns placed on board which could sweep any shore on which the end enemy may be on."

"Thank you for your courtsey" replied Angeline Jennings" put we have desired traveling more than fighting and hesides we arenore suply supplied with guns than you soo here. By the way!" she continued do you know why we are always making these tring!"

Feeling sure that she could trust the kindly face befor bor. Angeline Jennings reccunted as short in detail as possible the main i c incidents leadingupto their present position.

"what is yourpleasant plan!"asked the offder.

"We wish to go forward tward Abbicann as quickly as p ss possible!"Angeline Jennings replied eagerly. "We will try to find some clues as to the cause of the disaster there, findout who were the real guiltyones, and cause their cepture or even destruction ifpossible."

"And what persons do you really suspect if you say the Glandelinian surthorities are really responsible, and yet there is no proof against them?"

"The two Mutt and Jeff Spies. They have also stolen many great and importantplans sometimes ofour fortifications and other this gs." "Ah and they have disposed of them to Glandelinia!"

They have done that of ten. I and all my followers and even Violet and her sisters are at a loss to know how to provent their doing so in the future.Perhas I can get in to the enems I ines sometimes and I may try Myletzes someday. I understand heevr that that Glandelin ian general is verypowerful."

'Yes and he's very dangerous too"said the officer. why not try to get the assistance of general Aronburg. He is very much delahted to assist you in all your worthy endeavors, and if I see the gon ral I shell speak to him about the matter. We approciate all you boy and girlscouts have done for the cause and shallhope toreward you all. The morning is very hot and smoky again"be concluded as if the subject were closed. Turning away he removed his outer coat.

"Here comes a party of christian troupers. "announced winni e, who had been scanning the christian ade of the shore, as well as keeping a sharplook out all am und."

"and wat's more important here comes a troop of the Concentin ian cavarly"Jean rejo ned looking across the rier. "They've also got a let of empty san saddles. I wonder if they have been in an engagement." "They must have I believe"the officer said preparing todeport for he had his dutds to fullfill.

At this coment a sudden roar far off to the north for behind the wods on the energ shore told of the planting of one of the far dictant Glandelinian Fatteries which had so recently passed... Another and another, and still another caused the earth totromble. At regular intervals the cannon were fixed almost as rapidly is they could hall unded, and shells exploded in the river denoercialy close to the raft. "We're under fire"gasped one of the Poys/

Admit the frightful din, the boys and girls saw the coverly force desc stop not for from where the shore met even with the raft but seperated by a strip of woods. Their attention was diverted for the moment by the arival of another wave of hosemen. Shaking hands with all of them whowere assembled before them the officer turned. A quick sulute was exchanged, and he was rowed ashore to whre he was assisted to mount . The horse was a magnificent animal.

"Look there"whuspered Bob into Jeans ear. "See there's a whole throng of Glandelinians on shore over there. They're getting into hoats. She the booch who happens to be their leader getting into the host. The way he's dressed he surely isn't much of an ermy officer." Jean smiled as she turned back tward H Gertrudes cabin, and she began to explain to her friends how the man had gotten into the hoat wron g and the joke was hugely enjoyed untill Violet also explained that she understood that to be the only way a certain man can enter a

"And who is the officer if you please. "one of the boys asked. "I do not know. But they're heading for the raft."

"Well good night. In the face of generals Aronharys and Well good night. Some nerve I'll say shouted Radeliffe who stood near by. "Now that you mention it I can see what dare devils they are. Well what do you know about trainingour loudest guns on them. That'll arouse the army and it'll bring a hot fire down upon them."?

The guns were trained and opened upon the boats with a loud thundere ous roar. Instantly all was confusion, ten boats were demolished and sunk, and while the Glandel bridge by the modes were desperately swimming for the shore, al all of the hoys and zirls began talking and shouting at once, the Glandelinians were our sing, swearing and blaspheming, and all on the raft seemed unwindful of the fact that scannihere else Glandelinian comon were booming but a short distance away, and one shall had almost hit the raft, and that the enemy was replying with a rifle fire from the suviving boats at once.

The other men on board the raft had brought more guns to the rail ing, and now Angeline Jennings seemed to be aware of their dan ger-Breaking into the din she said;;;

"Comrades we'd better be getting out of here. These Glandelinians are shelling us, and sending many men to try and capture us and if they come closer in the fare of even general Archburgs army we'd he in a mighty badplace."

"Hiss Jennings your right"said Jack. "This locality is getting rather warm for hoys and girls shout our size. We'll have to get closer to the christian lines. I'm ready to go."

As Jack turned to give an order to the Engineer by his magaphone a big shell come screaming through the air. Ruldently the energy was getting the range, for the shell landed near the edge of the raft and in exploding threw a huge gayser and a wave of water upon it awamping scores of the boys and girls, and drenching many others with a blinding spray, killing six gunners, destroying two give and tearing a rift in that potion of the raft and sending fragments in all directions but fortunately none of the children were hurt. All of those also on deck were covered with debris andmud from the river butto-And in all the excitment Jack suddenly ords

"Oh look"and hepointed tward the engine room sabin. "See that fellow by the cabin-Hold on there you or I'll fire."

A tall man beside the wall of the cabin, seemed to belighting a fuse. He had loid a buse parkege by the wall of the cabin, glanced at Jack and a score of others running with drawn automatics, then bounded away, but they all opened fire and he fell dead riddled with bullets-guddenly two other fellows, one resembling the "Mutt"ran from another part of the raft and before anyone could fire at them had leaper into the water and dissperared.....

"That's the mutt "fellow."shrilled Jack. "He's been on the raft and hir ed those fellows to blow up the engine room. Harry, gury, Don't let him get away."

At once the boys and girls deshod to the western railings Without stopping to recken the consequences Jack darted for the mackage, seized it with its still sputtering fuse, and started to carry it every from the cabin. Jean who had been close behind her boy on chum reached Jacks side in an instant with her drawn knife in hand. It required only a moments time to out the fuse close to the bundle. A list spurt of Claus showed indeed that the effort had been successful . Both Jack And Jean then realized their very narrow assays indeed(you are in need) "That shall we do with thus this stuff, Jean Jack asked somewhat

"Throw it overboard into the water as far as you can. "she an swared. "But I'm wormying about George the German boy and some others. They dived into the water after those escaping men and are out there all alone. Gen you learn and follow where they have gone. For tunately for as the shelling has stopped and the boats have retreated. A mass ofour own coorades teems the shore."

"I sure don't know about that?" Jack hesitated. "It would be hard work for even all those boys to battle those three men, but they'll come had all right. They won't stay out there long."

"He won't be back right away if the "Mutt"spy gives th him the worst of it. "decided wildred anxiously. "I'll swim into the mater with a party of men and find him"

"Thank you "ildred" said Jean gratefully. "We can 't afford to lose the German boy, and I'm afraid the "Mutt" fellow is getting demorate." Mildred broad a boat and men getting in she started to row for the spot where George and the others had disappeared in the water. The had not rowed far, when they heard the roar of a huge Gasoline launch. In an instant one shot acrosss the water.

"There he is "Mildred cried. "There's Gourge on the boat with his

com unions fighting some man."

"It was indeed true. George and three other boys appeared cleinging to the bow of the boat and second to attempting to climb into the body of the craft even while it was running full speed. The boys and girls on the raft also saw him and saw him lean far cut to peer round the curve of the hoat. As the hoat proceeded onward the piolet described an immense circle evidently trying to confused those on the raft in case they intended to fire on the boat. With the added hurden of the four strong hovecouts shifting weight, and the strong counter current; in the river he seemed to have trouble in keeping the launch steadted/. "Two shots then three at once in quick succession were heard. The bors and the may were exchanging compliments. Neother however had scored. The hoat was now swinging back tward the wider stretch of water, whre on o all on deck were amzed at the sudden predicament of their friends for out from shore shot half a dozen boats loaded with men in grav-

Mildred who was nearest the gun, un limbered it, sixed it carefull and brought two of the persueing bowns down and hurled a'l in them to oternity. Again she loaded and fited, again and again she did it, and nearly fifty surviving men floudered in the water. However she finally ran out of ammunition for the gin and couldn't get no opportunity to shoot the others out of the water. Jean had a magazine rifle and she aimed at some boats when a shot came from one of them and hurled the gun from her harting her wist badly.

"Somethings the matter with the policy of the other host"sold Jack. "He's coming right tward us."

"Sure he's trying to circle round, to try and clear us. "Answered Jean nursing her sore wrist. "But how can we help George."

"T & Take a shot at the pilost"Fred"advised Mildred engerly. "Don't shoot, Fred"cautioned Jean. "You might hit one of the born." Nearer swept the boat, and its four warring passengers, and nearer came the persuing Glandelinian boats. The boys and the man inside the boat, (not the pilot) continued toexchange shots, but the condition was unfavorable to accurate marksmanship. Suddenly one of the shots from a gun fired by Radcliffe caused a terrific splash in the water near the boat and almost upset it. Horrified the boys and girls on deck stood in theirplaces as the persueing bonts drew closer unable to move. The Glandelinians were firing shot after shot and finally the three boys were killed, and George seemed to lose his grip on the framwork. He dropped from the edge of the bout into the water.

To prevent the other houts froming saining too close some of the others on board the raft opened with a roun of pirton and rifle the. and a machine cun was turned upon them and the Glandelinians terriffed at their I uss began to make a hasty retreat. One of the boats in its haste struck the roots of a floating tree and Jack a med a pivot gun at it and blew the boat, the tree, and the rasculs into the air. War t ex esting to find George hadly man gled Mildred my ged her beat which too had been under fire without results away in the direction of where the boy went into the water. Jack followed in another boat at a rapid on a pace. He raised his own magazine rifle and sent shot after shot in the direction of the retreating craft with windictiveness. The clanor of the motor suddenly of the work

Evidently several bullets had reached a vital part of the machinery. Real ing his danger. The po piloet slowed the boat, lack and Mildred rowed their boats in the draction of the boy intending to land their aid in rendering what assistance they might to George. A. shell from some distant for fer tito the water a short distance in front of Mildreds boat and barst sending into the air a huge column of water and smoke and almost swamping boat hoats. Stangered and stunned, the two, determined to do their best or die blundered ahead. A soore of bullets whizeed past from shore, but they present on Another water eruntion occurred bt ddddnochhrma. Two of the boys staggered with George across thedeck and into the cabin and laid the boys I imp form on the nearest cot. One of the or boys had dashd shead and now ran up with the modicine chest and a bucket of water. Mearly exhausted with his violent exertions and the experience he had gone through Jack at once set about measures to revive the boy ifpossible and see where his wounds were. To others contri u contributed their efforts to the same ends, and in a vecy short time they were rewarded by seeing their commades eyes lids twitch a little. A gasp and a shake of the head told them that Geor o still lived. Jack threw his head high upon into the mir.

"Glory to cod"he shouted. "Gan't kill a German so easy as that." "George.Goerge."called Jean"are you hurt. !Can you speak!" To both questions asked frantically George only modded his head. "Miere are you hurt most , Geor'e. Speak to me 11 you can!" "I was hit twice"was the scarcely audible reply.

In a few minutes or a little longer two of the boys were finished with treating the two bullet wounds which proved to be a trifle.

"Just two bullet scratches. "announced Jack gleefully, us they fin is finithed the dressing of the wound.

"I'm going to sign apledge. "came George's faint woice. "That was a lath too much. The Edded with a forced grin at his friends. "Step it Georgapless "commanded Jean. "That was too serious."

"Did you get him!" inquired the prestrate lade

With a start the boys and girls remembered the "butt"fellow and his boat. They had seen the loat stopping in the water, but in the excitement had forgoten him, and they had forgotten too, the dan ger in which they still were in with one accord, they acrembled to their feet and began to lock about.

"I move we not cut h of here as quickly as possible"Voted James. "You're right indeed. "Jack assented angerly. "Let's carry Goeres into his own orbin, and then be on our way to the shore of the christing limes. He will need a little help I guess."

Supported 'etween lack and Fred, George was helped back to his com athin. The engineer began the engine of the raft, past as the raft started a terrific w room in the auter greented all of the boys and "I girls. A terrific blast reverborated through the cir right on loand the raft, and through the sacks they saw i muster of ten flyings deching for the odge of the coft. Jack shouted an order to his ou. par comparions further dom as hepetuted tward the four men. Tus' note: they and a minter of others with rifles at the ready deald for med acrosss the deck. The men were very quick, quicker than they ever were before, but were not quick enough for the spouts, and they were quickly surrounded by the boys and even many of the cirls, who threatened them with rifles and long knives and pistols. Jack ran up andone of the men said something in German.

"I cannot understand you"he said sneeringly. "Gan any of you christian dogs speak Garman."

"I can answered George Zimmermon"but we talk you to surronder. Escapa is impossible. You must come to Cahin IO with us."

"meat is the christ"quoried the one who was a German siding with Glandelinians." What have we done!"

"G orga laughed to d loudly. Apparently the joke was a hure one. "Charge"he repeated incredullously. "Do you know that we have as much a right tocapture you when your on our raft, so much as you would have to capture us if we were in your lines. You are prisoners become o you were cought on our raft setting off on explosive that after all made more noise than it did damage, and it is not necessary for us kids to have a charge of a warrant. You are prisoners because we cary our warrants in these?" indicating his revolver. "You must obther come with us or be waifed or shot. Which shall it bef"

"We surrander" stated the Glandelinian cantian hopelessly "There do WB 50!"

"March along tward Cabin No to with us. We shall go slowly. disarm them fist boys."

"This was done.

"Butour coarade here has just suffered a had fall in trains to ascane"the caption protested. "He cannot wilk far in his present condition."

"So " c gamented George, with a quick suspicious glance at the colding Livicabet. "You he is evidently makened, and is but nearly a young man. Wo'ls see that he is carried in carin no TO. Yas other five men can walk however or the cabin is but a short distance." An order was sooken in alow tone to two Abysoinkilian soldier on board the raft, who at once set off at a shrp walk. The others still surrounded the Glandelinians to prevent their escape. Refusing to anserer any further am stions, and deligiting a o explanation in regard as to who constructed the caft, the buye slowly was and has prisoners tward the cabbs whre they recently had placed the other prisoners earlier in the morning. They were placed in, and the door locked and the cabin strictly guarded. The raft was now going at a rapid puce and they soon left the whizzing of bullets and the server by of shells a mondly distance in the rear.

"I see general Aronburgs camps come distance shead, "cried on of the hove.

"Tes there is where we are going. "replied Jack. "There k he adquerters too where we'll also sent these prisoners, especially relatives of the Muletze. And others who have red hair like that Garman one har" he added with a chuckle. They muon were back to their former goot where they had reached the camps on shore before, and the party of men who were assigned to take over the prisoner wentoff with them. Then a party of other christian soldiers wished to come aboard the raft and at the wang plank w they were halted by a sentry who however permitted them to peas on after recieving the proper answer to his challenge.

All who remained on deck, it being daylight now gazed with frenk curiousity at the ocones about then. It ramged like a hure page clipped from a hig story book. There they recognized the many fontures though which they had begut at encount Amarting m army carne but scarcely believed existed. It was considered best he the doctor towhere the wounded child acoust under own to Accordings cars, and it? they were well enough to be on duty. Therefore they were sent down on stretchers.

Without further perley Amgeline Jennings took a few steps along the passage until she finally come to a turn-Hero she passaged to wait for her commanders.

"Look here commeden"she encounced. "This passage splits. One goes straight shead, end the other turns to the right. I famou that one russ back tward the entrance at the rear of the schoolhouse."

"Then we don't went to take that. "he guards might did discover us ambdistake us for Gladeliaion accuts having been prisoners and trying to escepe."

"If we go straight cheed. "Angeline Jennings continued" I believe it is possible that we shall come out at some other ed of the building theats."

"We'll go straight on them for sure, "spoke up Jack, and as this seemed to be the decision of all, Angeline turned to proceed. There came a tremendous splant mingled with a choking cry from heregie found herself floundering about in almost ice cold water, through abovers of spay all over her commensions, who came crowding forward all excited.

"What's the matter sister?" cried Dolores. "No you need help. "Ash as she sp ke spot spoke she turned the shaft of 15th from her flashlight tword her sister, revealing the girlscout dripping wet, stand ing in water a littlemore than maist deep. Her hat end torn were "Come out of that. "commanded George Loughing.

"Queen I will thank you Goorge." realist the girl. "I failed to see that water untill I was lying down in it. The stenes of this tun mel is so black and the mater runs so smoothly I neither saw nor heard it."

Examination revealed a broad streem of meter ure and clear issue ing from the tunnel to the right and flowing along the one in which they now found themps! themselves. At one side a marrow shelf afforded footbold. After menuring Angelines flushlight by searching around in the water, which owing to its mater proof covering, was not we wat or damaged, they all proceeded along more out onely. In a short time they found the peanure going in a cert of downward ground, end them they were blocked blocked by a huge lake of mater and found themselfes themselves in an underground cert of cave with no outlet except for the mater. A faint oder of muck clung to the place and the ceiling of the cave wad driaming water.

"Here's where our trip in this location ends or I'm no good guesser."
rentured George. Although a careful search was made for an opening by encircling the lake none was discovered, and their they only found at the further and of the came that the tunnel like place continued and through this they continued. Directly Angeline Jennings passed and held out a warming he head, the st stopping the advance.

"I heard a strange noise"she exclemed"and could not make out what it could have been. Can any of you tell what that sound is!"

"Oh I believe I know what itis it is. "announced George." Maybe a decrtain powerplant has been installed in the undergroundportion of the school. This stream of water must be coming from a sort of spring or stream in the hill far back of the battle line near gowral general Virians army and the trustees of the schoolhouse no doubt just led it slong here. The streammust be running through a water wheel and the waste water therefore runs out a nice big hole in the cellar wall. I'll bet its a ram and it cause them to have water in the schoolhouse (moune de graine) "

"I believe you're right George."ngreed Angeline Riches. "Let all go that way and see ...:: """

They followed the pranner for a short distance, and they discovered that what George and had been right. A complete apparatus was found, oper ated by the power of the stream(don't screem) flowing through the broad, tunnie.

"Nevertheloss discovering this doesn't help us snyome hit."James protested. "There's no opening for the or to theodeside world except for the water."

"Well all we can do is so had and look over the wallls more carefully and see,,,"Offered Jack. "Maybe we overlooked conceening in on hury." hurry."

Accordingly they all slowly retraced their steps examining every inch of the walls on either side. Shortly after they passed passed then have where Angeline had fallen into the water, Jean & o had been t in the lead, turned hack with a muffled him and one finger acrosss her mouth and singuped the switch on her searchlight. "What in the world is it Jean!" queried Jack, following does behind

"I believed I amw the flicker of a nort of glare oragint in the massage. "replied Jean. "It flickered like a condic light, cand seems to be always dodging about."

"Maybe the place imponement by his Majesty the Decvect." wh s whispered Jack with a grin.

"Hush"hiered Jenn. "out out that nonsense."

They proceeded contiously, and reaching the cout the three boyscouts, and the girls,, saw a faint reflection on the wall. In a moment they heard voices. They observed that the 1 ight came from a small opening about three feet below them in the wall, and through this opening also ceme the sound of conversation. The In an instrumental Jean, stooped and was perring through the hole. She then arose shaking with excitement.

"Guess who are the demonsposensising this place. "she gritted in a whisper. "You'd never believe it. Two Glandelinian officers whom Inrecognices as accomplices of the patt and Jeff spice are prisoners in there. Strange too."

Acton ished the boy and girlscouts crept carefully to the opening to peer through and lieters It was an little Jean and enidelms Gladelinian officers were standing near the middle of a smallspartment. On the table near by sputtered and filekored a candle. As they gathered about the opening the boys and girls head the higher officer spoking.

"And so"they hourd."I heard that Glandelin ian boyscout Gerald Starring settled for the two little golden haired devils Gertude Angeline, Angeline miches, and the blacked haired little Frenchis Imp Schoefield Penrod.No person could survive a stab likethey recieved. But these chrätian dogs got us after all by shooting at our horses. We were captured as we got caught under the huses. "I'm mightly glad that you apeaking to a third one now coming into sight"happened to show up."

"Yes indeed"replied the third men. "Ifelt you needed me. After reaching Etheldrede I found you were captured here and therefore I made as good time as possible, but too I was wrarised when these christ ian dogs as on imped me, and put me here in here with you."

"No2 Now"continued the first spokesman" Ney're awaiting the arival of some christian dog officers of unusually high rank so they can try us as spice. I'm efraid mostly of those boy scouts who came in this building recelty with three wounded comrades, and whom they are I do not know, neither des it worry me. Fut I'm afraid of those who just came in in particularly one of those boys whom I recognized that is a sat of leader. They in our cames call him "THE RATLENDARM" though for why I could not guess. Maybe when they preside at the trial which is most likely, maybe I, Il be scarched, and I don't wan t them young christian dogs to find this package. If they do my name is mud."

"They're the main chasse . These officers act under their orders."
"where's the mackage!"

"Here." As he spoke he drew from itsplace of concealment at his inside coat pocket a flat package about the size of along business envelope.

This is something is that Irish dog general Clancy who swer sup reedes Manley gave into my possession to bring to general Inner Heidddi Myletze. What I want you to do is tocarry this for me untilli after the examination is over-I believe it is better if you let me put this inside of your which to it'll home down your back. It will be out of the way there. He careful too as that little make Redeliffs is worst armore clover than even. Sherlock Holmen or Hawkehaw the so world femous storied detectives and can opt mything."

Intentlythe hope and girls entened the adjust adjustment of the flat package. Indeed Angeline Jennings eyed every movement very closely and very greedily too with fingers itching to get possession of that large envelope. However she knew that the opening through which they were peeing was too small for her to reach in her hand and grasp it and it wasout of the question to ext expect the Glandelinian to step through such a small hole and hand her the package. Sgain the Glandelinian spake;

"Now if my story goes with this Gln Abbicammian boyscout chief, and they hold the others whoming are under suspicion and let us go, we ill be all right. If however those girlscout landers decide to let the others go and hold us. I'ld have this little can of Splatter Dose in my pocket which in exploding is a hundred thou and times worse than a stick of dynimite hundy in mypocket mere he indicated his contpocket, which hulged suspiciously and at a favorable moment I'll hurl it twend the Court Marchall Court. If I can get Angeline so much the better. The three others, An gelinia Aronburg, Angeline Riches, and Penrod are dead, and out of the way, and that'll settle one more who is equally as dangerous. In the excitement we'll slip through the crowd."

"Good scheme"agreed the third man. "And you say your assistant has secured four horses."."!

"He claimed that he would be able to get them in a hour. He will wait for us at the spot I described for you. I rely upon him. He's looking out so he won't get killed or captured."

"And then we'll be off. There's a big fortune for thebne who delivers to Myletze Clancy's plans. But why take them from Clancy. He's not a christian dog. He's on our side. "?

"I didn't say I took them stupid. I said he asked me to delier them to Myletze. It's a warning to Myletze to look out for the two Vivian page." And there is a fortune to us if we succeed in deliver ing it, and a higher commission too. Three other great Glandel inian generals are diskering for them right now-We'll makeout pile on this and cause the christian down a resounding good defeat."

"When is this christian dog expected to arive."!
"Quyaminute now-He's late as it is Now don't give yourself away. Just stick close to us, and remember the arrangements."

Jean tugged at Jacks slaces. Turning away from the operator opening the boys and girls turned away from the little hole, and forgetting theirplan to play a joke on their friends returned quickly tward the room in which they had come to rest their wounded friends, and too Angeline Jennings found the lever to operate their secret door more easily than they even suspected, and they all passed again into the chamber. As Jean closed the door with the short length of wire she went to the beds where Gertrude and the others lay and told them first about the prisoners and the mackage and then said that the rescale thought they were dead.

"Well then comrades we're dead after all. "Sailed Gertrude."W-on't those prisoners be shocked when they hear we're here!"

"Yes and it seems I'm about the same"replied Angeline Jennings soberly. "That fellow certainly is a rascal. He's planj planning on blowing all of us up."

"No he isn't"protested George. "He's planning on a fiasco or I'm draming.Remember your boy and girlscout motto and he prepred. Our Motto is God helps those that helps themselves. We'll give him and his three companions a very hig surprise and shock when the time comes."

"Thank you lack or George" replied the girl wout smiling faintly.
A soldier was rapping on the door.

"The court marshall is about ready. Are you going to hold it now" was the soldiers question.

"Man'll be there right away "said Radcliffe.

In the westerly class room of the schoolhouse, the teachers table had been arranged as if school was going to be kept. In it was seated Racfli Radcliffe and Angeline Jennings the former examing a pile of papers placed on the desk. About him and the girlscout were grouped several officers and an orderly, and all the dild scouts who were called were in their respective school sents and desks as if Class in school was being held-lighted by two lawss the interior of the schoolrows pestended an imposing and beautiful ploture. As Jack and Jean now appeared one of the soldiers who was ann offer rose as the prisoners were brought but the thetschottlroom school room. Angeline Jennings slacked her hands and her face turned a shade palar as she observed the little grosu which now approached. Jack drew his friend Jean backs step untill they were almost against the massa massive wells of the room.

"Jean"he whisparad"you had better stand a little further to one side. If anything should happen you know itmight-"

"Meyormind"declared Jean. "We didn't come into this schoolroum to back out now. If he or any of his dompanions starts anything I'll plus them all three."

Further conversation was impossible, for the officer who was to say act as questioner spoke to Angeline Jennings and she holding warning hand which told that all must be as quiet till you could hear a pin drop. Then as this was obeyed the officer turned to great the new commers. Between two heavily arred soldlers marched the three rebel soldlers who approached the deak with vindictive glunces at the children in the school dasks.

He then with his companions glanced at those at the desk.
"No we're not playing school"mneared Radeliffe." "May is it that you three were captured in our lines."

At this question knowing that Radeliffe could speak english the rebel at once launched inton long story, using the englishtonius tongue. The others could not follow the speech except Jenn who know it a little, but judged from the gestures and glances, that the man was trying to say that he was not a say, and makingup a bunch of excuses as towny he was in the lines, by mere accident and so forth.

"You may speak Abbieannian."directed Angeline Jennings "Besides sir, we're not english here, and only one or two of us understand your present language."

"You haveunderstood just what I have told you sulked the prisoner. "Maybe but your statement will only be accepted for what it is worth to us. "was h r reply. "Just now all of us present in this school room are inquiring with special regard to your presence within general Aronhurgs Lines, the attempts to blow up our rafts, the attacksupon us under general Aronburgs vory eyes and other incidents. We captured you on the raft with your followers just the last time you try tried to blow it up. It has been stated also that you came in an airship from the Glandelinian armics, and that you landed near general Vivianslines and escaped him only to be captured by us on the raft, and that too you have on your person orone other of you have certain papers and letters and a map ofinterest to this country which general James Scanlion Clasy gave you to deliver to general Izner Myletze. All this I for some reason or other know this is true, and which indicates that you were passing through here not only as a messenger for that Irish dog , who fights against God for a lousy little prayer not being answered, but because also you are here as a spy in the interest f of clandelinia and her unholy cause. Also I know that is true, and there is but one course for me to persue. Can you refute the charge. "?

Overcome with rage at the evident reversal of hisplans, the Glandelinian leader choked for a moment, while he glared winkedly at the chief of all girlscoats and boys too Angeline Jennings. Then shaking his fists at Radcliffe and at George Zimmermon whom he had revognized a one of the boy prisoners in the enemylineslong ago he burst out in a torrent of abuse.

"None of your abuse" shouted Jack You are the spies . I can prove to any of the whole assembly in their desks here that you cameupon our raft to blow us up, and tru tried to escape, and that you had been an accomplice of that Glandelinian boysout Gerald Starring to help you gather information which would frustrate our efforts to reach Abbieann. And concerning yourself indicating the leading man I and my superior officers here | indicating Radeliffs, Angeline Jennings, and Jenn, and Jane Melfort, have heard and seen enough to justify all of us in holding you and your two friends for further cross examination on the original charge of being a pspy. Have you anything further to say on that subject!"The boyscaut questioned.

"This is only the subject I have for all christian dogs. shouted the Glandelinian prisoner, and he made a sudden swift movement tward his outside cost pocket. You'll never try me or my companions as a spy. "

He witherew his hand quickly and made a perfect swing of his arm and launched tward The boy and griscouts the deadly little can of 357 T.W .T explosives. Instantly he and his three commenions sorang away tward the other windows, but the explosive went through one of the windows landing on the soft turf outside and doing no harm. Seeing a swarm of boys and girls suddenly leaving the school seats to v try and capture him and his companions, bethrew another can directly for Angeline Rithes Jennings. He and they then had the chance to jump out of the school windows by sach ingout the glass, and landing six feet below sprang away acrosss the lawn the paths of the four seperating as they went. Angeline Jennings had not forgotten her own baseball tatios for though she is a girl she was an expert catcher and a thrower. hist as the fool swing his arm the second time shile near the window, the girl jumped high into the air, acressing loud enough to make all fandom throughout the world neavy her, and at the same time waving her arese It was just as she had sourdently desired. The second aim of the Glandelinian though he too was an expert thrower was spoiled. And too with the mostumusual and wonderful descritt destarity the girlscout leader leaped forward, and caught the small can of explosives high in midnight. The forced of the momentum as she saized the dangerous mizzle missle (which would have killed every one in the schoolroom had it exploded) whirled her around, but she regained her feet,, and for an instant held atarms length the object which meant frightful destruction of the whole school school house if the rascal had succeeded in carrying out his dastard intention. Involuntarily every one in the schoolroom had dodged under their sents as they realized that the explosive thrown again at the hard wall would bring about a dreadful disaster in which no one wished to share. As Angeline Jennings with a grin on her face turned to place the dangerous missle on the teachers dosk, she had given q quick order to the number of children who had raced to the open windows. "Get those Glandel intens if you can."

Theirpistols had been quickly drawn as they had swared to the windows from their seats, and fifty shots rangout as one. However the Glandelinians had got beyond statel shot range by that time but nevertheless the groups at the windows were surprised beyond their wits, for they heard two deafening explosions and saw two clouds of smoke appear, and the four men dropped in their tracks at full length, and lay still as they had fallen. Everyone impediately left the achoolhouse and ran forward. They found only one of the four men non injured though he had been prostrated by the fall and the shock of the explosion. Hr w He was halved to rise by two of a number of men who came running forward, and then supported between the pair he was stood before Angeline Rither Jennings, and Radoliffe.

You gunners are good marksmen"commented Radeliffe. "nut how did you from that distance see these four men on the run!"

"We observed them running from the schoolhouse, and the many shots coming from the windows Master Radoliffs answered the gunner smiling as helifted his hand in salute.

"There is something poculiar about this matter anyhow."declared Radoliffe."But how did you hit the mark so easily."?

"My gunners took careful aim."was the answer." "I believe that is quite reason able magreed Radoliffe." I believe you."

The dead bodies which were shattered were searched for the plans and those that thought the rascals would be carrying the ducument document in a belt about his body scarched that and not finding anything believed the explos ons explosions might have destroyed the plans. Just then George came up.

"The plans care on that man there"he said. He "He has them in a secret place hanging down his back inside his undershirt."

"You're a little devil of a black faced liar. "yelled the man look ing about for a chance to make another attempt at escape.

"You call me that again and I'll drop you where you are "retorted George suddenly drawing his pistol. "You have that pokuge ofplans that the leader gave you more than half am hour ago. I saw the exchange

"Shoot me if you wish but it's a lie. "again declared the man. "I'll admit I did have the plans, but they're torn to bits now, and you will never see them.

"Search this man and see if he tells the truth." said Radcliffe. One of the soldiers thrust his hand down the mans collar and to the surprise of all the packet was brought forth. With a rough pull the string was severed, and the parcel was handed to Radoliffe. The mans consternation over the discountry of his lies was complete.

"Pardon me comrades"Radcliffe then apologized to everyone present. "I think we shall have to go back to the schoollroom. I shall have to examine the contents."

1. 1 00

Soon every one were in their respective seats andplaces again in the schoolroom.Per Peering over Raduliffes shouldars as heunfolded the contents of the little package, Jean gave a shout of joy.

"Hurrah "she oried jumping about. "Hurrah. Those are the plans of the Abbieum territory and of the two armies concentrated near here to oppose Myletzes plans. We have captured this in time."

What incredulously, gasped George Zimmermon pressing forwards "It certainly is declared Jean. "This is a plan of the whole termi tory of Abbieann, indicating the spot ofour armies, where we go with ow raft, and our location and so forth, showing also the proposed barrier that Mylotze was advised to make to stop our trip with locations for batteries to blow us all up."

"Then we captured a valuable ducoment." anid Jack. "We've frustrated bloody Clancy."

"I hould say so. Other charts too are here of greater value. We've frustrated both Clancy and Myletzo by captureing these men and killing three. This one shall be condemned to face the firing squad as a spy to morrow at sunrise."

All were overjoyed to think that the deadly efforts of gen ral general Clancy had failed to bring about the di n dis aster that it could have.

"and now"continued Radoliffe as the mater seemed to be settled "We must hasten forward to the raft once more to see that it is perfectly safe for the onward trip when general Aronhurg moves. We all have some disagreeable work before us and cannot sare any time than is necessary."

"Gan we take the reinforcing boys and girls along with us who had wi h wished to join us!" queried George anxiously.

"You may take as many as there's room on the raft only "replied Jack himself."We cannot allow too heavy a load on the raft. It is too dangerous an undertaking"

T want to thank you good Rangers for your kindness you have shown to us. "declaredone of the Vivianite boys. "you have been kind in accepting us into your ranks."

"I and all the rest have been trying to be fair with you." was Jacks reply /"You s have shown example andloyalty to your country that breaks all records, and your devotion to duty has only been exceeded by your bravery under most trying conditions as the Princesses have informed us. We shall accept your troop in our ranks with pleasure."

Before the dinner hour many of the boys and girlscouts were again on their beloved "Mary Ann."

"Well I'm glad to get my face turned tward the Historic Abbieann again grinned George as they were working on the raft at eleaning it up and making repairs that were necessiary."

"just the same"saidone of the Vivianites "I vote three cheers for you and all your officers. You have treated us all nicely. We like you all. You are all fine."

"Yes"added Jack Saunders." But how about yourselves. You are just as good as we are. But we all go through the same experiences and find out that war is not a very nice game."

Gertrude Angeline awake the following morning feeling almost as fit as hefore her injury. But nevertheless when she tried to raise herself up in hed she couldn't hardly make the movement. Neverty Movertheless she had just finished her breakfast in bed, when one of the boyscouts brought her a message from Mildred Mac Maxwell, scribbled an hour before. Sheopened it and read:

"Dear Gertrude; Got news that at Hangar Run general Vivian was wounded again. He however slept through then ight; and is now slightly beter better. Jack Evans is in command. The wound however thank Heaven had been a very slightone, he can speak though he seemed still drowsy andunewere of his condition or how the days battle turned out. He eve even does not seem to have any remembrance of the events of the pro cending day. So there is nothingmore than we can do now but remain with general Aronburg for a time. Anduntill general Vivian is welll again Jack Evens is in command, and he advised us because of con ditions exisiting there it would be better for us not to come there as it is toodangerous, that general Aronburg can care for us all-He

He will com and see us and Gertrude as soon as he can have the chance. Meanwhile trust in the Love of .od."

M11dred

Maxwell.::LLK"

Radoliffe was on had hand before Gertrude has finished her break fast-she was overjoyed to soo him back. Werythin g sofer he told her was going well and the two other christian armies facing the foe at Bickmell town and Big Knool or firkmool were waiting for more rein forcements which was expected to arive at any hour-He informed Gertrude and also Angeline michae, and Penod that general Bup tiste was also moving forwards.

"That general is all right, and a dread to Clancy"he laughed."I know Baptists, and I don't believe there's 11 be any trouble on account of that. He's loyal to the cause believe mas. He was always a good helper to us boy and girls couts. And now he'll do his best to worst the enemy at Rig Girl Knool when the time comes.."

The two girls and Penrod agreed with Radoliffs General Dupont had an independent army of his own, and Emptists was no tikely to have to fear anything coroning Manley or Scanlow Clancy. The probability was that he's have towatch out for general Rnymonds Richardson Fedderal. There was something more that Radoliffs had no on the mind. Gertrude was conscious of her disguised sisters hesitation and finally Radoliffs said to general Aronburg who had just come in to see Gertrude:

"Did you see sir anything different about your deak early this morning!"

"Yes I did"the general answered. "I had looked at it. I found nothing wrong but there's a different key. "He looked at Radoliffs questionly.

"It was found broken opn yesterday afternoon"said Radcliffe.

"Broken open"said the general with a scowl.?

"Tes sir. And not only that tut ransacked from top to bottom. Like wise yojr your bedroom. Ad what was astonishing to me and the others nothing was taken so far as I or my followers could see. Leastwise your very pocket book, and your gold watch you left in it by mistake was left there. Nothing was missing. Come sir and look for yourself."

Excusing themselves to Gertrude, and the others the two went into the generals room. At the advise of Radoliffe the general unlooked the desk and went through it carefully and not hastily. Radoliffe had slightly changed the position of the papers but so far as the general himself could see everything was there.

"What do you make of it my boy?"he asked.

"There are only two persons who might have had keys to our headquart headquarters."answered Radcliffe slowly. One "one ofour boyscouts who is or was a stranger among us is gone."

"Francis Morrist"

"Yes. We didn't miss himtill thismorning."

"He must have left the day before this happened and----

"Then; "

Radcliffe nodded at the unspoken question of the general.
"Yes sir-Rut why?" the lad asked. "I've tried to think it over. It must be he didn 't I hopeintend a raid, but maybe he wanted a map or papers mightly badly. And it might be connected probably with some of the statements concerning the Cladelinian boyacout Gerald Starring."

"It can't be that map of Abbieann." said the general, and he picked it up from a drawer.

They thought over the problemalt was evident that some some runaway boyscout must have broken into the room probably with a duplicate set of keys, we but what he wanted was a mystery that could not be solved.

"Perhaps again it might have been that boy in disguise and wished to know how big my army was without taking anything awhy. "suggested the general. "If so I hop e the information satisfied as I do not know the size of my army yet myself. And it'll he a joke on us hoth. Anyway we'll get a new lock on the door Rad."

"I saw to it bring done" said the buy.

They turned their thoughts to other matters.

"How are the movements of our armiss?"the general asked.
"The officers are getting up more troops from the southe ast"said Radcliffs."Put there isn't enough in your army yet to hold out against Myletse powerful host in a pitched battle. I guess we'll have a few weeks of inactivity after all. sire.s:::."

"Then we can't hold out on this ground. I propose we move."

"I've been thinking said Radeliffs and too I've been calculating. If we was to lay off from battle with Myletze and his armies for two months, and stop the advance of Glancy and his followers instead, it mish become the said the

"Out of the question me boy. It wouldn't be fair to my staff, and Violet, and her sisters wants me to move against Myletze and engage him if possible and drive him tward Abbienne. It would be fatal to our own part too if we was to back out now. NobRedcliffe I've been thinking too. How about the grounds near "Flood Abbienne". It looks like a good apot to concentrate my army and force Myletze to battle."

"But it doesn't seem to be on our limits"anid Radeliffs. "And its

"Who told you so!"

"Why everybody knows that Even when we had one of the Glendelinian prisoners he himself said so."

"He was lying then."

"Rut it ain't on the map. Why would the glandelinians went to?"---"I don't know what the reason of Myletze in, but it is some ensay schemen depend on it. I saw it marked into the Abbiconn territory when I was on the advance, and surely no Glandelinian general would give his plans away to any of us, and if he did he must have been crazy to make such a mistake. Anyway theres, the record. Resides I had the plans announced to me by Violet, and her sisters themselves.""QAASSWE
"Now here's my ides"""said Radcliffs. "There ought to be deep water in that locality, and we could form some sort of a trap for a good portion of the Glandelinian army."

"We'd lest need lote of pontoon bonta."

"Half a million would haplenty. The cost is nothing. And even if it doesn't pl play well on the grme it might enable us to keep Myletze going until we can get the army preund him curselves and frustrate himsows in traine to set round us."

"Radcliffe pondered. Then he said;

""General Frank Morris said it was all good for it to be tried when I suggested it to him . He want over there with general Jacque Fox. But of course general we have to be caref I what sort of a more we make for too none of the Glandel inians would have wanted us to know anything anything about that territory. Maybe there is a good chance for a position there. Maybe---"

"Myletze isn't after plotting to run me out of Abbieann territory" said General Aronburg. "Heplans to keep me from gettingout. I wish I knew shoultely what he is after. Anyway suppose we run up your raft to that locality and expore the territor y."

Radcliffe assented, and no more was said on the subk subject. The tris was to be made as soon as the army moved. As the general went out the building Mildred Maxwell came up to him.

"General Vivian telegraphed that he is much better said the little girlscuit officer."He is not wounded as bad as it had been feared and he can walk with help. I have telephoned the dotor in general Vivians lines, and he says that if the general is kept quiet and not allowed to distress himself in any way, having the comfort of having won a splendid victory i he will make a complete rd recovery in no time. Fortunately the wound was on the thigh. Bo you see general you better not advance yet. He intends to make a junction with you."

"But when Myletze is moving round----"the general began with a touch of fear and anxiety;

"He won't accomplish the move as Viviania Angeline Richaes father is coming on general. And by them -- who knows what may happen. We will talk it over together. If there is no other way at least you know!!

"That I shall not have towait at least a month." he said happily. "You have not yet seen----- "he co t continued;

"Yes "answered the little gil girl in alone tone."He met me this morning. He had ridden alog along the new road,,, and he was waiting for me. He seemed to have sensed that I was going out. He-begged gears! that we'd accompany him up to Abbieanns I told him it was impossible until we could get communication with violet and her sisters and get them to come here. Then he was angry. He threatened all sorts of things against Clandelinia."

"He has threatened clandelinia before said "said general Aronburg not surprised. "Usually his threats do come true wildred. To Glandelinia Mildred Walter John Starring is an exceedingly

mater he was with Gertrude and after some conversation she finally said:

"And you will be entenful for the movement of Hylatza will you Uncle dear-tand you won't fight him without proper mournes and mennal" "R xcept in nelf defende int now. Yes Gertrude door I provide you that. I've heard a lots shout Hylatza and I don't believe any one would or could help fearing him. If I do lick him they'll all lock upon me as a great genral, but it'll all only be by the help of Gods"

As he stood by the window he saw Jack hale Mildred upon her horse and felt a wild desire to ride beside her -- anywhere as long as he might be withous of these brave fair child secutable watched her ride away till she had diseppeared in the direction of the river where the raft was moored. Then he went back to see to the harmenning of his horse as he decided to go out to view the river himself. A little later another of the girlscouts come to Gertrude glefully, with the news that general Myletse in his advance around general Aronhurge army was checked by the suddan appearance of general Francis Viviania Riches , and that the advance of general Vivienanne an 4 Reppo John Evens had been discovered by Hyletze who had nover magneted Street generals would ever dare think of following him, and that a certain parties of general Richardson Halateds army had been also discovered along a creek almost at the northern limits of polores Ferm. This when the name got to general Aronhurg drove the thought of his own plans temporarily out of his mind. The minutes presed into two hours endone helf after break, fast(very fas b) and my battle second to be thrustened hare in our nest as either general mere determined not to try to frustrate any move that Mylatza would make, but believed how glordous it would be if they caild even surround and force him to surrender. The weather which at this time should show several inches of snow on the ground an and the surrounding hills, and when the rivers should already have a than coating of ice was like in the hottest season of july in Afiv Africa although it was arry October Nevertheless with the arrival of these new christian armies never had general Archarg been more hopeful.:: "We will win out yot and clear this holy Abbicana territory from the enemy Certrude"the general said.... Gertrude Angeline, one ions on ohe was, was for once disposed to agree with him. She wished that general wivian would arive, and Brownsassu ton. He felt sure Myletza than would altogether abandon his pretes pretense of working around general Aronhurgs rear, which would now have been become the coming however to general Walter Starrings movement against his own rear. Prouseens had not yet recleved the letter from general Concedinian Aunburg,, he had been to St Anne, and was marching up the Ste Maria Rao Road Gonditions there because of the behanon wittle had been had for quite a spell, all railroads were rep r reported close t closed to transporation, or at least doing only the trival business common of transporting soldiers and prov ions, andminitions. All other rods were closed to navigation. Also general Aronburg by a wireless telegraph had heard from violet, and her sisters almost daily, but they couldn't yet come us to the north untill general vivians army would be united with Hansons which wasmus moving hastily for Abbinum, and too they realized the ardent heed of concentrating all their thoughts upon their own military teals work. General Dupont had made three spirited advances, and general Hanson is Baptists who still was out of sight had, given complete satisfaction. General Aronburg sure meant to figit out the issue with Myletze paralyzed his army ifpossible.

Tward the middle of the morning the movements of general Isner Myletze seemed about to be checked, and success esemed now almost assured. General Dupont was getting ready to move forward, and general Aronturg turned his thoughts oncessors to the movements of his own army more from eagerness to explore that part of the Abbieans territory than fromeny thought of cutting through Myletzes army. Next then there came a lit light tap at the door and to his astonishment walked in general Walter Starring.

Hi am very sorry we couldn't get ahead of Myletze"he said. I"I have been away. Not I have returned."

CHAPTER TEN...".".

A RECORD OF UNISTAL SHOCKS LIKE MARTHQUAKES PRODUCED BY THE BIGGER BATTLES OF THE PAST UP TO OCTOBER 1913////

//// THE BATTLES AND ITS CONCUCCION. WARS GREAT DEMONS OF DESTRUCTION//////

ACTIVE PROGRESS OF THE WAR......".""////

The Twin Provinces or States of Angelinia, Calverinia, and Bengall States since the beginning of beginning of the war had rivalled the record of all true wars of any magnitude in their experiences of something akin to earthquakes produced by the violence of battles. and great explosions during battles or at other times. The first of these made note of was at the battle of Delight's Junction in November on Thankagiving day, but they have been as areacrous as all the big battles if not disasterous since. Among them as spoken of before were the great shocks produced by touriffy commonades, and awful exelonions at North Bend and Sunbana Greek during the Delight's Junctions seventeen days battles ending at Evengelinta Grants and Jennie vivian town is with first day of the battle 13.000.000 were killed on the christian side, and the communitors of the battle of Anu Aurandenallie, with thirty three thousand communions, and at the battle of Jennie Turner, where I, II4,000 lost their lives in defending the causes of either sine It will and ought to prove more of interest to all our renders if we pass over these ruinious disasters of the war and the battles already written of proceeding chapters. one 1 ike at Abbicam and confine ourselves first to less destructive battles and disasters, which had taken place in the Angelinia Province itself.

The United d States of Angelinia Province large a section of southern Abbieannia as it occupys was fortunate so far in being in a gr a great measure destitute of the great war horror phenomena except in the extreme south and north early in the war, while destructive battles so far have been very rare so far as the sar progressed us to now The Calverinia States seemed to be the very "Mitripool" of the war. This it seems does not apply to the Angelinia United States as it is now but as it was early in the war. It however has annexed the war horror and the disasters it brought forth with the war raging in Calverinia at its very doors. Angelinia Vine Province is its mearest state, and subject to the wars worst surt of disasters so far as mentioned in previous volume, and throughout Calverinia and partic uar particularly in Calverinia and Bengall Provinces they now possess the most spectacular war disaster ever on all record still on, while the dreadful"red Plague" of the forests of Calverinia it is its most common attendant and a frightful menance to the sister State Angelinia. But in the southern Angelinia Province the war is only a tail lashing so far, and war phenomena are confined only to a more dramatic movement of armies and no disorder so fare Mo part of the "war Zone was absolutely free from the earth concussions produced by the mightiest battles. Slight concussions of the ground were much more common than any one dan imagine, but the shock was not exactly like natural earthquakes, but nevertheless far more sudden, and the violence was in comparison to the numbers of cannons used in battle, and the force of the shell explosions, and the numbers exploding at the same time. In the war because of battles and great explosions even in Angelinia State there had been a number of eath concussions of considerable violence, and which made houses in towns and cities act as if demons possessed them, or objects in the buildings and made people at first believe these manefestations were supernatural.

Prior to that of the Abbieann horror, the most destructive to life and property was that of the wild insane battle of Headrick Junction or Cedernine, on the creek of that name between Welkinb, or Melkinghurg and Stanck towns, though the battle convis convulsion of Evangeline St Claire in the valley of that name near Tobioque might have proved a much greater calema calamity and scare but for the fact that dreadful forest fires, and floods had caused the populations of those territories to floo to mafor quarters. As regards the number of strange earth concussions in southern Calverinia it was told to paper of imi that in St wichaels State alone 345, shooks of a strange nature were recorded in two hundred and fifty days, while a doubt many slighter ones were left unrecorded. Once maperor wiving while writing at his deak during the battle of Cedernine noticed that the ink bottle on his table stared or started to dames the jig without any apparent cause, pb tures on walls turned their backs to him with a sudden bang severe enough totach the gloss in the frames completely out, and that the window such rattled and baged enough to drive him out of the house in a panic thinking an earthquake had started o up. Taking however the whole of Calverinte there were since 1912 364 remorded in ten months from June 1912, and ear early in 1813 fifty nine most severe shocks were recorded which were felt in frenkish connors in Angelinia Agathia more than two fifths of them being on the Mic-Hollester Run. Because of this there is one house in Angelinia Agathia now known by the nicka nickname of "Possessed"house. Most of these shocks were very sudden. and undermonly severe, though they did no recorded durage though freakish phenomenes acoduced by them scared the prople into the streets making them believe their houses were suddenly possessed by evil spirits. Confinding ourselves to those of the nest in important in their effects, we shallspeak first of the wibratory shocks which took slace throughout the small part of southern Calverinia in December 1912 , and in the year and month of the great artillary horror at Vivian Wiskey, andTfrinoque On the 13th of December of 1912 while the vibrations at Trino as still continued. Angelinia Agathia was violently vibrated and the whole country in that 11 locality locality, loud explosive noises accompanying the shocks, but to the surprise of the people the noise dian't come from underground but seemed to be in the very air and far distant. Along the shores of the Angelline Run River there was severe vibrations coming every few seconds in rhytem fashion, and there was much agitation in the river maters, and many dead fish were thrown up onto the shore. This event however though full of scary freaks and phenomenes of extraord harr kind, was of minor importance and produced by the battles of Delight 's Junction, but being much inferior to that of the horrors of gedernine in July 1913 in which all of Southern Calverinin, and Northern Angelinia alin alike were affected by violent vibrations which though not felt on the ground or in the streets were noticed becausely in the houses of towns and villiages coming in a throbbing faction and v with varying times a second passing for every sudden shook.. The convulsions produced by that battle took place simultaneously during the time the battle was raging at its worst, but ending with the stopping of that heroulean opnflict.

Throughout July too the southern portion of Calverinia was violently shaken by the Abbieann horrors, the shocks being so frequent and so unusa all, unusally severe that people abadened all their houses and slept on on the open ground. The most destructive concussions came in June of 1913 when the Bengall and Calverinian State cities and towns of the Central Province were destroyed with such awful loss of life, during the Abbieann disaster. It therefore may be said that Calverinia State has been proved more subject to dissterous shocks produced by battles and great explosions than any other section of Abbisannia. The Abbisann explosions shook the whole region about the very Bay of Calverine Green Burg City many buildings being thrown down, and in all others there were "Possessed" signs and Phenomeneans. In the whole city, so far as it was hardly any of the brick or stone or wooden houses escaped injury though few lives were lost. The disturbance was sudden and felt fourteen times for fifteen minutes, and felt farther west than Calverine, the whole range of the Vivian Hills being violently shaken, and the strange vibrations extended into Angelinia wine. Yet it was not felt at all by any one standing on the ground. The centre of a activity as all reader may know by now was north of Abbieann about fourty seven miles in Bengal County, and immense landslides occurred in mountain ranges close to Abbieann. It was said a tremendous fissure connecting with a explosion crater was turn along the eastern been of the mountain range for ten miles showing the force of the explosion, the land to the east of the onening and of the orater rising, and that to the west sinking several feet showing showing that the terrific explosion might have undermined some of the landscape by the eruption of the earth caused by so much dynimite and gan cotton. All the reader knows the whole of many eities for from the blusts were completely or partially desclished by the sudden and strange vibrations, but the explosion consumsions caused no loss of life at all compared to the awful numbers wheel out by the great floods following following, and the conflagrations resulting. This calendar in greatness breaks all records.

And then throughout June , July and August in other sections as well as in Me Mullementt State of Colverinia many concursion s had cocupred mostly from explosions. As a rule they were more distinguished by frequency than violence, though on twenty or thirty occasions they were unusually severe also and had yery colemitous effects.

They extended along the southwestern consts of Calverinia, but the worst seemed to be in Mullenant's State, and their long series and continuous or continuence was remarkable in view of the territory affects affected being far w from the dreaded war zone.

But never was any scatter nors visited than the Bengall State. The surface of Central Colverinia was a good deal altered by these asful vibrations—several big lakes being left by the floods to remain always, while rivers were drained till now their bads are dry. Several new towns were oblitareted. The ground on which the town of La Polema stands and the banks of the Norma Run River for fifteen miles above it near one of the explosion scenes strangely subsided persunently about eight to six feet, and a big Catholic Cenetry of the outskirts of the city is now under water. In the netabloring forests the trees from the awful concussions were thrown into inclinedpositions in every direction, and many of their trunks and branches were broken. But there was no symptoms of real earthquakes. The concussions were noticed by the destruction but strangely not felt underfoot, butnors in the air.

The ground did not ovell into waves like in great cartiquekes ne ther were there left any hollow depressions. The shocks were not vertical nor horizontal, but what ever they were they were far too sudden to be from real natural earthquakes, and had more the symptoms symo symptoms caused by explosion a than by earthquakes. Every shock was the same duration, the same kind, but varied in violence in accord innes to the violence of the explosions. The slightest shock and the slightest explosion was said to have made the Krakaton explosion near Java seem like a harmless "Puff" firecrasker in comparison. But nearest where the explosions did occur the force and the shocks did result in the subsidence of a large tract of country, but only in the territory of the explosions, between eighty and one hundreduiles in length, from north to south, and from thirtyniles in breadth from southeast to northwest . Lakes now mark many of the localities affected by the disasterous flood, where the water remedied in these depress ions. It is only to the reason that this part of the country was so thickly populated that such an unusual great loss of life occured.

Little Abbieann was a central point of this concussion horror the twenty shocks there being of the greatest force.

The peculiar vibrations however was not confined to Bengall State but affected nearly half of the whole of Abbicannia, and in thousands of cities and thousan de of towns making the fresk strange and waird "Possessed" manefeatations and do a doing also in eapable damage and frightening millions of os peopleout of their wits, and making them think the enc of the worls was coming. The destruction of Fair Middred Greenburg, Francis Atlanta, with many to usands of their inhabitent were incidents of this disaster as already described.

Even far as Angelinia Agathia is from Albianan, well say as far as Ghouago is from 8t Paul Minn, the vibrations were intensely felt seventeen times, and houses vibrated every time that hight as if they were "going to a dence", and all the "possession"freaks that occurred would have made a broken hearted person die lauphings.

The disturbance named by these explosions too was not confined to the Abbinannian Gountry, but affected nearly hallf of that section of the woils, eding in concussions felt as fer south as the Catheinre Catherine IslesThe destruction of the town of Blomlinia with many thousands of its imhabitants,,, were other strange far away effects felt as incidents of this "Abbinann" occur vulsion.

One of the Abbiennatan accentists told however that the oon quasiums were far more intense in the Abbiennat territory. The most destructive vibrations ever felt and caused by bettle in the whr so far was those which were felt in towns and villinges during the recent battle of Lebenon the injury causeachy the vibrations being largel, due to the facts that populous cities felt it the most and smaller towns the least. The shocks were felt for the full duration of the battle without hardly any shatement for a distance of one hundred miles, and the terror and confusion due to these withentions were greatly increased by the sky being dark with smake people flering in panic fear from the tumbling cracking, and tierelly jurging houses, to creak refuse in the wider streats courts and the like.

Southern Calverinia had been affected by the wide soread concussions produced by the shocks of the battles of Cedernine-These in some cases did some injury too, but the effect then was far such less than the wibrations produced by the battle of behanon-Early in the morning at the beginning of the battle several dight explosion like vibrations occured and were noticed with objects movable in houses doing many freakleh and weird stunts, but then did not excite much attention. But more distinct ellections were felt at ten oclock in the morning, but the climax was not noticed untill the afternoon-The atmp atmosperence of the day despite it being October hadbeen unusually sulty and quiet, the sky had the derkened strange apparance as if the worlds and a was approaching, the breezes from the cest, was almost entirely absent, and there was a little sunset like glow far in the southeast.

As the "beautifu I" hour of two thirty colock in the afternonie was reached, there was suddenly heard a strange booming sound(in the direction of Lebanon) compared by some as if a Volcanic eruption was in its loudest thanders, betters compared if to the sound of trains running at no great distance, by others it seemed to have sounded like a clattor produced by two or more considered moving at a rapid rate over a roughly stone paved street, by others again to the sound of cannons firing incess ant long rolling viberesting salutes..... It was simultaneously followed for every sid sount by a strange thumping and beating as if not from the ground, but against the houses of the town of Gyamberlane, and instead of rocking and swaying to and from as expected the houses seemed stationary but objects inside jumped up and down, and walls of some houses fell into the street revealing the rooms inside!!!

Fi Furniture was violently moved and dashed, to the floor, or jumped to the cailing and down again, beds deneed the tango(if they can) pictures were awing from the walls to the floors, and in meny cases turned violently with their backs to the front violently enough to shatter the glass, and every movable thing was thrown into extroardinary convulsions as if every one of the houses were possessed by insone evil spirits or ghosts and other phontoms. The greatest intensity of the extroardinary phenomena was conidered to have been in the after noon, and it was then that so many chimneys were broken off at the junction of the roofs, that even roofs of wooden houses fell in showers to the streets, and of tall buildings the upper sections came crashing down bringing ruin and death with it.

The duration of these severe and strange vibrations was the full afternoon, and the vibrations didn't vary but all seemed the same violence, though some of the concussions had lested without a stop to thirty or fourty five minutes. The impression produced on many was that it could be subdivided into many distinct house hitting vibrations, while others were of the opinion that they were one continuou continuous vibration, or succession of vibrations all the afternon afternoon, with the greatest intensity during the loudestvof the sounds or detomations.

In this city fourty seven prsons were killed outright, and four times that number died soon after of their hurts, or from exposure, and hundreds,, were injureds Among the huildings, the havor though not too disasterous was nevertheless very great. There was not a single building in the city which had escaped serious injury. The great extent of the damage varied greatly, ranging from total demolition down to the loss of chimney tops and the dislodgement ofmore or less plastering, end of all windows being shaken out in the directions of the sounds. The number of hulldings which were completely demiliehed and laveled to the ground(hound) was not great,, but there were thousands of them which lost largeportions of their walls. There were very many also which remained standing but so hadly shattered or so badly spring orjumped out of place and dislodered from their found ations thatpublic softy would require that they should beputled down altogether. However there was not so fut for an telegraphic communication would make known a brick or atome building which was notmored or less cracked, and in most of them the cracks were a permanent didiffigurement and a nounce of danger and inconvienience. However the concustions did not affect religions tracks allendly by west earthquakes railroads were display displaced lat rielly and sometimes alternately depressed and elevated. Occassionally several lateral sometimes many flexures of double curvature and of great memount were to be observed. And sometimes many hundrade of yards of track would have been shoved bedily out ofplace. . But no harm was done to rails during these vibrations . Weither was the ground financed at anyplaces, and resident were there may craterleta formed.

ceneral Comeanthmian Aromburg white returning from a Murlough had come close to the battlefield of Lebanon and any mome of it. He had made a cereful observation collected by himself and others with him concerning the manner of the glandelinian charges, and come to the conclusion, that one of the waves of Gl n glandelinian assault showed that the Glandelinian soldiers were at this time advancing onward at an unusual speed for their mean velocity was the rate that a men could run at the avar average. The men is force of one of these Glandelinian assaults which for a time hadditerally carried all before it, was also ascertained. Appendix to one wave of assaults was a double one, the two y were being thirteen hund hundred feet apart, and the skirminh lime preceeding them running nearly the same sintence to the south of Lebanon. The concusation of the Bir Lebanon bettle was not folt as an earthquake tremor, it assemd to be a sort of air wave shocks, and affecting the the country as far around the battlefield as the concursions of a gignatia vi Volcenic cruption would have to me. The Vibrations were felt in every direction, north, south, west, and east, southeas, t northe ast, and so on, and also deflected to the east and west, and the appearent benging sound against the houses indicated that it was more of an explosion variety than that from asmnons, and must have been caused by so many expluding shells. Also these vibrations of the buttle had been attributed to other various causes, but geological experts think that it was due to both the terrible number of big cannons in a action, great explosions, and of the rattling thunder of so many thousands of shells per minute.

In heir g asked what was his one popinion as to how a portion of

To most of us readers I suppose, this war might seem to be unusual when a country like Abbieannia, and her states should have been quite a confortable place of residence. Of course however it is not so, the forces of the war, worst than the forces of Nature everywhere as at every time surrounds the population, forces always bringing more death and destruction to man and the works of his nands than Nature could ever boast of having ever accomplished. The war had also created strangely enough for est files, which for this coming new year is the story had decided upon that there'll he no winter, though the elternation of supp summer and winter is to us and them generally an agreeable relief from the monotony of a a uniform climate. The variation from sunlight to cloud, from dry we ather to rainfu rainfall was always equally viewed as a pleasant escape from the weariness of too great fixity of natural conditions which was now apparently brought on by the fierce heats of these gigantic forest fires, which the hotter they become the more they spread, and the quicker. Throughout Southern Calverin ia the change from day to night seemed to have stopped, it seemed now almost night, or twilight and night. But has Nature --- if we are justified in personifyingbthe laws and forces of the univ universe-----Has Mother Nature become to take sides with the Glandelinian foe, and is she in the mood to help Glandelinia sweep the christian countries like leaves from her path. !

i Vi

It does seem so to the unfor turate Calver Inian, and Angelinian, esecially to the dwellers of the Forest, and Abbieson regions. The Wind for instance in the forest fires is a demons in chains At times the farce heat of these raging blazes with flusses lesping many hun dreds of feet into the mir, creates terrific hot win determs, that breaks its fetters, and rushing on in mad and irrestible fury, rending and destroying,, sweeping such such trifles as cities and towns and those to live in their homes to common ruin and spread the flames so that whole armies of forest fire fighters cannot place themselves before the "DREADFUL RED PLACUES""... Usually the sun itself has in countries poured down in burbing rays for weeks andmonths together, scorching the fertile fields, drying up the live giving streams, bringing famine an andmisery to lands ofplanty and comfort, elmost making the blood buil in our veins. The forest fines, created heat that for three hundred miles from the blazes even in regions whre now it is October wouldnut a person in mind of being in the "death Valley"in California or in the hottest spot of Africa, and keep the air and sky always darkened with the smoke, and the sky line at night red from the glare. It's antithesis, the windstorm not produced by the heat but which usually originates from natural courses is at times a still more terrible visit ant and spreads the fire dreadfully. And the rainstorms which did occur occassionally in forest file regions produced by the heat of the fires itself, though it poured down in frightful floods, did not quenche the fir a in their storm path totally and only increased the sie see de more od bluve shut that the clouds would be seen at see six hundred miles from land. That number of IS 19103 while it had been looked forward to with joyious whic anit antishination, had become too ardent in its grasp because of the forest fires, and winter often welcomed by the Calverinians withlike pleasurently antichations, well probably there'll be no winter this year. Exclosions have torn up the landscape bringing ruin to man cities, floods have why wined out sections of Calverinia, and manymillionslost their lives in battle.

Such is the makeup of the war that is progressing and growing more severe, such is the vag arias of the forms of the war which threaten on every hand. But these enumerated are not the whole. Could any one in Calverinia or other states say with a stam of the foot upon the solid earth"Here at last or at least I'm far from th e war, here the goodly winds will blow and the rains descend without hinderance of the wars furies, let the summer scorch and the winter. chilll the good earth still stands firm beneath me, and of it at least I'm sure. !!!"A

Who ever says so speaks headlessly and heatily, for a wars horror can reach near and far and the farthest of the land can become as unsafe as in the absolute war zone itself. The powers of wers disasters as great as they are, and mighty in destruction as they become, could in this story never be surpassed by the powers of nature herself.

Nevertheless uch is the enemy which the christian countries have to deal, that even the clandelinians seem to control the ruthlesspowers of nature, and use such terriffic fore forces by creating explosions, forest fires, floods and the like with thepurpose to sweep the too confident Calverinians from the "earths sailing face." The main horrors of the war so far here spoken off in volume after volume , are the forest fire, explosion and flood, tearing and rending and so often bringing ruin to mens bousted fenes and palaces.

No one who ever he is who has ever seen a forest fire can por saibly forget the granduer of the spectacle. It's more terrible in sight than a volcano or burning mountain, castinf forth steam, huge red hot tones smoke cinders and lava. At night the scene of the forest fires is doubly terrible, when darkness shows the ernormous rolling clouds of red or white hot flames intermingled with black smoke. At times indeed a forest fite may be a big smudge, and only smok rises from the burning lands. Even this may travel slowly forward, but deep down in the burning rubbish, the red hot flames are ever preparaing to force their way upward, through the smouldering debris, and sometime when all is seemingly calm, suddenly a fierce wind springs up, and soon flames hundreds of feet high rise into the air, the conflagration becomes genera and destroyes everything in its path/

It is either the same with the horrors of forest fires as with the great floods that had raged over Calverinia and extended so far south ward into the Angeliniah States. violent vio volcaic eruptions were as the explosion of a childs pistol camp compared to great expl explosions in this dreadful war. Because of the violence of many explosions, the roar of the perpetual battles of the west, and battles everywhere, the air and the surface of the earth in Calverin is seemed never quite still Vibrations like pounding at houses were constantly felt every day which could be distinguished by delicate instruments but only rarely were these air convulsions of sufficient force to be noticed, except by the manne of these instruments. At inter vals however, the shocks were of violent character, and when explosions w re were like that of the North Abbieann character no edifice or human habitantion could for a moment stand when too close to the scen of these great explosions, or the roar of so many big cannons and explosions of so manypowerful earth rending shells, muring battles the earth had been frequently rea asunder by terrific explosions. One mine explosion during the battle of behanon changed the course of a creek that runs into the Vantura Stream, and the waters were swallowed up by fissures rent in the surface by the force of the explosion, while ruin impended in a thousand forms. The cities during the Abbienn gorror became death pits, and the cultivated fields and lands are still even nowinder the awful flood waters or buried beneath floods of mud. sand and debris left by the receding waters .::..:,

Fortunately,, these convulsions of this unsuall, and dreadful wars ... were comparative rarities in thickly inhabited places and the main one was confined to the Bengall State.

"What do even the renders know of those strange powerful explosives that tore up the Abbieann terrorities like so many violent volcanic eruptions each ten times worse than the worst activities of Mt Krakatoa! With all our own science we would have been a step beyond the ancients if the truths of the disaster was not revealed, as will be seen in early chapters of following volume. To all northern Calverinians they believed the Abbieannian disasters were of myster ious volcanic eruptions, but no evidence of volcanic mater was found. The worst volcanic scuptions everknown in the world or in the to attend with the confidence of the same along the same of destructions, whose flood results as previously mentioned, extended for thousands ofmiles over the landscaped.

By strangers in Calvariain the Abbieann disaster afterwards was regarded with stronge and superstituous awe, and it was considered that because the Calverinians up there were no unaturally good, that the demolical powers of Hell must have created suchdisasters through Natural means, and others now believed that the Culverinian would consider it highly implous to make any investigations as to the nature of the disaster.

Emperor vivian was told by general Virgil that Abbieann marks the spot where the explosions in their shocks and concussions caused the sliding of one side of a whole mountain. To t the information of one of the examerners one of the "Explosion craters nearest Abbieann was claimed to be the force of an eruption from volcanic en ergies, for accordingly to with esses there came after the explosion more black smoke and a lurid glow as if from molten lavas. This old myth was in many respects more consent to the or the facts of the smell of gunpowder than that of the sulphurious fumes of volcanic smokes and s ash. All who had investigated the horrors were a further in their theories as to the cause than when they started. They could only speak of the forces as "Probably" caused by Volcanic outbursts! The questions arose too when these heories were given out;

"Does Volcanic eruptions throwout the smell of Gunpowder and dynimit and Gun Cotton!

Does volcanic eruptions only throwout rocks of limestones, water, mud and sand, clay, trees, and rain fishes all over the land landscape as investigations had proved to have happened.!

Or was the earth underneath the State so farcely heated. miles below our feet, that at the release of pressure the solid rock under the ground was blown into the airlike explosions!"

Or was the steam,, from the contact of undergroun d rivers and deep lying fires the origin of the terrible rendingnowers of these strang strange and mysterious explosions, ca lled Kruptions! Truly none of them could answer any of these questions, with assurance, and could only guess and conjecture from the facts only of what had Howeverone thing is sure what causes suspicion of all these strange dieasters. In the early beginning of the war nothing was more remarkable than the extreme fewness of explosion, -shock disasters in comparison wh with these that occurred in June 1913 and continuing up to August. It is to be borne in mind therefore, that at the beginning of the war the number of disasters though great were small.

The west increase in the number of disasters is owing to a great spread and violence of the workthe same is to be east of the strange concussions of battles, which also have beened in fury since the begginning of the withind titends wor. There may too possibly have been an unusual increase in these changement, but this is hardly probable, the change being more likely due to the increase in the number of battles, explosions and other war disasters.

The fury of great floods however is very much different from that of the other war disastors, really being more dangerous and having more force suggest forest fires too are equally as bad and probably more consuming, ad whother the Abbleaum flood was an immediate result of the explanion disasters or not is hardly wor h worth while montioning. though the greatest freak of all the disaster was of the long mountains of wrackage of houses and wa earth, muchi machinery and other materials which had been flung into forumtion none distance in front but very close to Hildred Greenburg city. The came of this however is easy to dec describe. In the path of the flood in front of Mildred Greenburg a small stream formed into a huge head where there was a sory of long e.e elevation of ground, and the floods swirling round this formed the wreckage windrows of immonse height and remark able regularity ... owever this windrow had been a scene of most unsurpass ing horror for so man in jured had been caught anidet of all this wreckings and could not be rescued and had to be left to perish most miserably. Such explosions as had happened near Abbieann could have easily blown the whole Island of St Hantingue to pieces in the case of the Krakaton eruption, in the East Indies for instance the whole mountain and island was rest into fragments by explosions heard over two thousand miles, and which were flung as dust miles high into the air. One of the lesser Explosions of Abbinann, had that happened at Krakatoa would have blown the city of Batavia off the map.

The main point we wish to indicate is that it seemed that the Abbicann explosions which all these boy and girlanoits are trying to have investigated may never be found out as to the true cause untill after October is past. They have had to so over debris of cities and towns piled up like huge rubbish hosps, rescabling some end of the world already having occured without any fire adding to it except where such was textants of forests are burning.

When one Scientists was asked shout the matter after he had investig ated one of the great his craters torn in the ground he answered;

"It must have been to the hurning heat of the earths crust and the influence of presence, and more largely to the influx of river water to the molten rock which lie miles below the smface of surface of Calverinia, that these strangs convulsions which destroyed Abbieann and caused the big floods are due-Water on reaching these overheated strata, must have exploded into volumes of steam and instead of the explosions finding free vent in the mountains must have been apr apt therefore to break into cruption from these level plains and rend the surface of the Calverinian Soil assunder and into hugo holes and fissures in its efforts to escape. This must be considered the most peculiar, and most transmous volcanic phenomena in all history."

"But how can it he possible then!"asked the other."I doubt your statement sir!"
"How do you doubt it!"

"Why sir if we should sask to give a general full description of volcanic eruptions of any sort, it would be in some words as follows; Anceruption is usually preceded by earthquakes, which affect the whole surrounding country, and associated with which are the unusually loud underground explosions, that seem like the sound of ast artillery firing. The mountain usually quivers with internal convulsions due to the efforts of its confined forces to find an opening. Even the drying up of wells and sprngs and rivers are apt to takeplace the water sinking downward through the cracks newly made in the rooks and soil. Finally sir the fierce unchained energy rends an opening through the crater, or the mountain side, and an eruption begins. It comes usually of course with a terrible outburst that shakes the mountain to its very foundation, explosions follow rapidly and with increasing force, while steam issues and mounts upw rds upwards into a lofty column. Too the steem and escaping gases in their fierce outhreaks hurl up into the air great quentities of solid rock torn from the sides of the orater. The hume blocks meeting each dher so often in their rises and falls,, are gradually broken and ground into minute fragments forming dust or so called ashes often of extreme fineness and in much such quantities as frequently to blotout the light of the aun for days. There too is another may in which a great deal of volcanic dust is made——the lava is full of steam and geans, which in its expans ion twers the molten rock into atoms, often converting it into the finest dust. Yet here these so called suptions didn't have no such symptoms. The explosions each one following each other in rapid success ion were secondary in duration. And if so if these were suptions of volcanic ortein why was there such strong smells of mun powder in the sire!"

To this answer the scientist couldn't say a word.

Nothing however is great in the unusual mights than the great "Red Planus" of the Calverinian southeastern Forests, Ever since Sent. 1912 the Red Plague had becompressing like the wildest pastilence among the human race, ac hundreds after hundreds of sores coing before it sesmingly every second, and the dreadful red plague has cent up such volumes of smoke that the atmosphere not over nearly all of Calverinia but into Abbieannin far north, even near to the country and nation of Protestantia was and is louded with it since the horror b gan and the darkened and various colored vapors had have corried to the northern part of Mormonuia, six hundreduiles northwest of the main State of Abbiennia Abbienmingcountries in such quantities as to make the sun shine through it like a blood red half, and to make weird astonishing colors colors of the sky, or to blot out the min ultogether puring the raging furies of those conflagrations so great is the numities of the seas of smoke righn up to scores of thousands of feet, that whenever the wind is masterly it has caused darkness at Vivian Wickey, four hundred m iles away, and when the winds were westerly, the darkness was partly cone, but the sky looked the color of blood red copper, and sometimes to the color or yellow crayon, and then to b a brownish, and somethies the color of dun.

It was hoped by the frightened inhabitants of prostrated Calverinia that the great heat moves rising into the air from the immense clouds of flame would suddenly condense the sir with the chill of the upper air and cause rainctores, but though this cometimes happened it ine only increased the immense volumes of choke, which at three were becoming to such a great scale, that ships wavout east on the Angelinian seas reported soming huge rolling walls of it 1,000 miles away, and that darkness was over half of Salverinia for dave and weeks without a break, and the for of smoke so dense that to avoid suffocation people flad to the north-No one could stand the heat one hundred miles away. In addition to this phenomena, greay great "Fire Burricanes have arisen spreading the "Red Plague" with the speed of an express train. In the terrific Mic-Whirthern Run forest file of June 1913 the flames were so great in quanity as to be seen leading through the smoke clouds five hundred miles away, and to extend along the horizon from enat towest. Great explosions have occured, rocks have been melted like molten law a wy the heat on hillsides, and dirt and clay once wet have turned white hot and rolled down burning forested hills like melted glass . In the and Head Rick Junction forest fire horror streams of melted rock caused by the heat were no great in quantity as to fill a ravine sixty feet deep and two hundred feet wide, and to stillextend over an open meadow to a dist adistance of cighteen hundred yards forming a like of miniture lava fifty feet deep, while the flames of the conflagration were said to be leading over fifteen hundred feet high and threw such a heat as to be felt in a parching smouldering degree for fifty miles, starting new fies at that distance. Forest fire fighters gave it up and fled in panic from this roaring hell;

In the course of the succeeding months following the beginning of the conflagrations progressive horrors of this fire have communed much more forests than would have been seen along the whole Rockey Mountain Region of Galifornia-These great conflagrations are not only confined to forested mountains, but rage also in the forested plains, and look as if the very country itself was in a great crupt ion.Occasacionaly great forest three have tekemplace also in the west throwing up added columns of the dense smoke. The formation of these immangurable forest fires is blamed on battles, but such a theory is not well founded. During the battle of Headrick Junction, that desidful forest fire just previously mentioned was heading that way, and yet the battle is blamed for it. The fire even struck Headrick Junction first, and the battle is blamed.

During the Battle of Jenie Jennie Turner a flood of fie fire was advancing, but a sudden change of wind, reaved both the enemy and christian armies from a mudden disaster because of it. And the battle of Jennie Turmer also was blessed. And it was an arm of the South Eastern Colverinism fires.

In the progress of these forest fires since the beginning of Stempter September the amount of fir forest burned over is estimated to have in this story contained enough timber to cover the whole of the United States, with fifty miles of forests burning every helf hour. These great immeasureable forest fires are however series in number, andone extends as if all the forests were almost hurning at once along the whole Rockey Mountain districts of the two sections of the North Americas of from north to south, though of couse not all hurning at one time but the fire to take up that immense territory in due time without there hains any home to check it. The horrid ded a Cedernine for est fire crossed the extreme Eastern section of the Sunherm River territory not far from the femous Annie Arenburgs pun ste stream, and after the passage of this hell these rivers and lakes in the vinicity contained enough dond finch in such a nwfil abundance on the boiled dry bottoms that their doony began a sort of plague in that vinicity.Lake Sunbeam boiled dry leavingmillions of dead and cooked fish strewn over its bottom. The burned over territor empared as if a storm of volcanic ash still mouldering and making have fallen for ten veers without stoneing.

An overveton Ar charrystion of the forest'fires could show those who watch and studied their process even at great risk that they have three well marked phases of action. The least of these forest fires was or is the huge mmoker burning where there islots of ground rubbish high impenetrable brush but not enough trace to burn un to their tops. But this state of forest fires though slower is also a very dangerousone, since such a smoulder is also if huge hard to overcome, and rain if coming on would increase the make to a terrible degree, onlyputting out the fire on the surface and making it a worse smudge underneath. The second stang stage is one ofmilder activity with an occassioan occassional somewhat farce one, according to the nature and formation of the forests, this is not to be still more dangerous, there plenty of high flames, though so swift in its progress though a littlemore so then the smudge. The third phrase is the three fold fire or what is usually called the "Combination blaze" Ground and brush and trees to gether turn at one time. This happens where the forest is very thick till its nearly dark, and growth also is heavy and thick from the ground and great thickly set vines and other forest moss hangs down from the branches. There are also some peculiar dried up swampty regions in these forests where pouliar enough may be found immense dried up peat bu bogs, and large open clearings where there's bogs of influmable tar and p oil. These make files that quadruple the ammount of smoke of different shades or quadruple the ammount of flames. The worse of all is when all trees of the forests have pine tar and Turpentine for the sap. These forest fires of the latyer sort o are of extreme fury, and cause wide spread destruction. In this case its sucide for fire fighters to try to stop its progress.

Such are the general features of the vast furies of these progressive forest files which is being frightfully perilous to the whole of Calverinia, causing the threat of pestilence because of the lack of such sunshine, and by the terrific heats which even now threatens to allow no approach of winter for the coming season. Yet even then hundreds of thousands of men have volunteered to fight this Red Plague, armies of soldiers not in battle have tried theirmost desperate efforts to check and overcome these swful forest blazes, namely too for the sale of the value of the forests endangered. Of all the wars disasters these forest fires breaks the d record. The forest file once struck an abandoned munition depot used by forest rangers, suddenly the earth quaked from the force of the explosion, the blast rered as if a volcano had broken into eruption in the midst of the forest file, or as if a mountain had been rent in twain, and great clouds of smoke rolling like caluiflower had been seen to be hurled thousands of feet into the air.

Though the first formation of the forest fire(St Anns's Countty Southeastern Calverinia) had not been observed quick enough to have determined its cause, it would seem that by the speed with which it spread that it was of incendairy origin, followed by the outbreak of other fires in other localities at the same time, but with no such evidence at first as to reallly blame it upon the enemy. No battles had reallly occured there.

The forest fires began on a long range of low forested mountains. and as one of the mountains was an extinct Volcano called by the name of Mount St Peters, it has at fist been helieved when the smoke was seen that the Volcano had been in eruption and had set the forests ablaze by its streams of lan lava. The first clouds of smoke from the fires were so white and heavy and had such strange rolling forms that those whowitnessed it believed believed that large volumes of steam was issuing from the Volcanic vent, and from the color of other clouds soon coming they believed that the various gases followed siut. But at night nothing but copious flames were seen issuing forward upwerd and a/s also downward, and the mountain itself showed no glow from the crater, nor were there any explosions that accompany any volcani volcanic di disturbances. The conflagration therefore was investig ated from a great height by scientists who had been called to view the scene but they predicted that there were no t traces of any hydrogen, neither were there any such gases as nitrogen. carbon, dioxide, hydrochloric soid or any sulphur dioxide, but there was plenty of odor of burning pine wood, leaves and ground. They did detect some sort of explosive activity with the aid of their glasses. but they believed that the fie struck something explosive, and that the strangely white clouds was not steam, but shoke, from flumes and burning grounds of very high temperature, tainting the atmospheric oxygen so as to make strange unatural coloring in the sky far above.

Devaily too much emoke can too naturally disturb the electrical conditions of the atmosphere, so that stronge appearances in the sky, as noted with the advance of fires of this sort would have been noted. which afrights observers and makes them think of the approach of the end of the world.

Resides these symptons of the fire observed by the scientists there was great heat waves, and that too it was important to notice that the clouds of vapors did not issue from any side of the mountain spasmodically, nor was there any signs of activity from the crater, neither was there any other sound, save that which is produced by a great fire. Though it was risky, as the fire might come round that way too, nevertheless the scientists took the chances to climb the mountain on the unburning side to the crater to make sure of their theories and were able todiscover that the mountain was as quiet as it was days before the discovery of the fire.

A great mass of people mostly men, want out directly from various towns to fight this great conflagration, but the rocks and slopes of the mountain being mostly laves became intensely heated if they were not in an incandescent state, and came down slowly as if lava floor were onland therefore the men, ddn 't believe the scientists and claimed it was an eruption that started the fiesiThey fought the blaze nevertheless, and had it partly overcome by their great energies when another big one broke out ten miles away. Most of the games of the forest fires were from the burning ground, and from the trees, and therefore that it was as claimed to be a volcanic eruption was soon disvoered discovered to be un error of observation, due to the discovery of new fires breaking out elsewhere very mysteriously, and the reflect ion of a far distant blaze upon the clouds of make at night.

Explosions however were more unusual sometimes in their force. solid stones were known to have been thrown by explosions in the air during battles with ernormous force and to great heights, and those not hurled vertically by the explosions felling in consequeines at 'considerable distances from the battlefields. A huge block of stone said to have been weighing two thousand tons was said to have been thrown ten miles by one of the explosions at or near Absolann; indeed masses of rock weight assuch as thirty and fourty tons to have been hurled by other explosions during disasters and battles, and during the battle of Jennie vivian Town on Sunbaum Creek ston's were suid to have been hurled to a distance of minty miles by one of the big explosions there.

Other materials thrown far by the explosions were earth, rubbish, mud, sand, clay and the fragments of trees.

Though on the investigation of the Abbieum explosions masses of great limestone rocks had been torn from the ground and hirled to a great distance by the force of the blasts it was thought to have been caused by eruptions which must have blewout the solidplug of rocks which must have cooled at the bottom of some volcanic crater or that some volcano had been blownup, and that the bulk of the solid particles of which the volcano itself was composed of but none of the stone was found to be from volcanoes

"When reduced to its simplest terms, a forest fire may be defined as a "Red Plague of the Trees, or rather a "Fire Pestilence, and through the forest it goes as if nothing could chok it. The finnes in these blazes seems to consume everything, the very heat penetrates the coul and ridi rigid rocks under the forest floor, and causes then to burn the ground through so that the very earth turns red hot. The extent of a dreadful forest fire of this nature can only be conjected conject ured but judging from the approximately kn own rate of increase in the conflagration, with speed(on an average of sixteen to fifty miles an hour if wind is blowing, and the temperature of which the flames rages the heat) they must somningly have a length in the worst stages of probably one hundred miles each . There are other factors to be considered, but in general terms it is safe toassume that the formations of advancing conflagrations are irregular, manymiles in length, two to three miles in whith.

During forest fires of the slow andmore quieter type, the flames burn more alo ng the rubbish growing on the ground and climbping partlyup the trees, and moves forward with the speed of a girentia smildes/. A farce combination fire however spreads widely andlike an one of these would form a conflagration several hundred square miles in length as had been observed in the territory mear Evangeline Evengeline St diaire. Even now in the story going over a portion of the Sumbeam Rier, there are sheets of flame which is advancing in the manner just named, some four hundred qu're aquare miles in length, and not over seventy feet in width. These conflagrations is flamingup the slopes of forested hills has caused melted rocks and so hes to almost case cascade down steep burning forested slopes and to flow through narrow valleys for several miles before hecoming chilled sufficiently to arrest its progress.

. Instances are also shundant where the forest fires are burning fiercaly over wide forestedpleins with immunealy expended branches. Illustrations also can be furnished in gouthern Calverinia, in which one of these fdes u burning isone hundred and fifty miles in length, with the flames leaping more than a thousand feet in height, but have a bread brendth of only eight or t n ten smiles. In the dame of forest fies illustrated by these exemples, there is no sheemed of many explosions and a person standing on a slope witnessing a file of this origin over fifty miles suffers even then severe inconvenience from the radiant heat even though the winds blow from him to the blazose

The quieter forest fires or smidges are worst however for the swful clouds of smoke they produce. If however the foest fires are mainly all flames, bthe vapors and games contained in the hurning trees seem to find more difficulty in escaping, and may be retained untill the main fire masses, and then they roll in bommans sens of smuke clouds from the remains. Forest files in which the scoke is copous is the main smudges, and the gassesundermenth the smudge seems to be retarded untill the pent up energy bursts all bounds, and there's produce enough snoke to cover the sky in such masses as to cause darkness for a very great extent. One characteristic example is the fires burning near Evangeline St Claire.

Near Ev nevengeline St Claire during the battles of Trinoque there explosions had occured during the fires themselves which were said to have shattered would hillsides and hurled the fragments into the air, from probable gas escaping from the hillsides and becom ing afire. Wholevburning forests had been shettered by gleantic explosions coming from unknown sources during conflagrations. Clouds of amoke during these explosions were hurled manymiles his the large fire brands burdd in all directions by the terrible explosions commonly fell back into the burning forests, but sometimes the explosions have hurled upwards terrific clouds of sparks and burning leaves, and had been carried several miles by a wind then blowing to start new fires for in advance of the main one willo if a strong galo is blowing the sparks and burning embers had been carried namely three miles. Forest fires of the worst type not un commonly have melted rock on the slopes of forested hills which had flo wed for several miles. In certain instances these downflows of liquid rock occured after the hottest conflagrations and made a mountain

There had been edone of games nor had there been any stems accompanying the strange outhirsts,, and neither had there been any sort of volcanic matter seen such as lave, scoria or "bread Crust Bombs. oh Such masses whirling through the air in a plastic sta statevo often hec often become more or less rounded in form or shape, or the explosive for: force shatters them into fragments producing quainties of the finest Volumnio dust or sand-Mone of this could be located after the supposed oruptions. There was no fall of mud, nor was there any steum in the Meruptive Molouds, every one despite the theories of many of the scientist absolutely helieved it was caused by explosions for at the time of the fake Solicia gorror the air because of the snoke caused by the explosions was as dark as midnight for fifteen miles round for twenty to fifty minut a minutes. There was another ex ample which proved that the disasters were not from volcanic activity. Volcanoes when that start with arestions in a plain don't blow holes in the ground and leave them as holes but volcances are builded. All the great disasters of the war appear to be very remarkable. Owing to a gomeral sil similiarty in the concussions the battles in Colverinia and on Angelinian 8011 had very similiar symptoms, but the bigger concussio s concussions of fierce hattles, so secondary shocks had been felt and explosions have occured as violent as if a Volcano had blown up.

In size battles varied from mere s, skirmishes, such as themost numerous of the conflicts, to battles like Cedernine, with a loss of life add incomprehensible to renkon or 1 ike Evangeline at Claire with a atill higger 1 cas of life (gethyour wife) or behanon and St Ethau Etheldreds, the two biggest battles of the war so far be g barger buttlefields of vaster extent are to be remambered mear the territory of Vivian wickny, but many battles of even severe mature are dwarfted by those of Lebanon and St Etheldreda. If is of course fortunate in one way that there had not been any explosions of ing asureable force st St Ethaldrads.

But from the directions forest fires take, shows they're not to blame fro from bettles. Several blazes have issued from different directions. Their sizes are and is ernormous. Yet blazes wary much in size and in the rate at which they burn forward.

This much depends however on the sundount of wild wind that drives,,,, it forward andupon the slopes of hills, and mountains the con flagrations have to burn up. One branch of a fuest fire near Evenue line St Claire burned up a hill four wiles in less than three minutes,,, while a conflagration near Cedernine burned up h eighteen milbs of a slope in two hours, paging at first live a long wall of white hot clouds of flame, the rear portion of the conflagration tail ends into fierce smoking smotiliers,, while clouds of smoke and great smothering heat rises from it for days. Thus is the progress of a Calverinian forest fie.

As to what was the causes of the great forest fires at first the Unfortunate Government, of Calverinia knew very little. Various theories had been advanced.. but nothing by any means of mr a facts had been discovered, and considerable differences of opinions existed. In truth for a long long time they know so little concerning the condis conditions existing that caused the dreadful blazes that any views concerning the responsibilities was necessarily largely conjectural.

The heats of such forest fires was us unusual because of the intensity of the conflagrations. If we were to judge merely from sure temperatues reasonably believed to exist among such dreadful clouds of flame leaping someny fundreds of fact slong a hundred mile front, and felt toscorching twenty miles away, and if we might overlook the question of heat pressure of forest fire "hurricenes" we should certainly say that it is a wonder the flames didn't turn the mountain sides up which it burned into a temporary fluid state. It seemed at least certain that the temperatures surely must have been so high that on the slopes of hills the most refractory solids, whether metals or milerel, loose rooks and stones, sand slopes yeilded into molton before such tempor atures of so frightful a forest conflagration. But no one could tell for sure whether under the pressure of sch tremendous heat such tremend ous heat rocks had turned into liquids or not.

And it could have been indeed reasonably doubted whether the terms solid and liquid were applicable in the sense of which forest re rungers understand them, to the materials in the path of such dreadful fires. A principal which already should be well known in the arts is that many if not all solids may be made to flow on the slops of hills like liquids if such heat be admissinst adm administered. Whatever be the state of affairs in the path of a highly heated atmosphere produced appear to have the a characteristics of a quiet eruption. Sometimes too from the firre heats there is no fundamental differences between any types of great funst files into which it is convienent to divide the bir conflagration..... In extreme examples of dangerous forest fies, the forests have become afterms on the high mountain ton, and a volcanic eruption flares enough to blow two thousand fast off summit from a mountain couldn't make the apparent eruption of flame and smoke look more fleroes guch an occurance was reported in the case of the extent volcano Bt Catherine, when the flames of hurning forests raced up its slopes. The entire mountain seemed todisappear in the flames in two days time all the forests being reduced to should oring ushes and like debrisand the layes on the exposed portions ran down molten once more from the drendful heat. The essential feature of a big forest fire, as stated shove is the con combination fire, loading from the course of a everything burning at one time and making such heat as to run rocks like water. And the most murked variations in the the process depends on the intensity of the fires burning, and on the winds that is then blowing.

The case of the forest fires though believed incendary to be birning so fireely and on suchan extensive extent is stills inster for discussion. Gertain furest fire geographs contend that florod windstorms a is the solomotive power, while others consider that the fixes is forced forward owing to the inflamable meterials of the trees and ground rubbish of which it burns. The view most favorably entertuined at pesance in reference to the general nature of these swill for est fase is that so many fires had formed as to becomeone, owing principally to winds tearing blazing embers and southering them far and wide, and that the intense heat also sets the trees after more than three or four mins ahead of the me in configurations. As the fixes burn over creeks they buil away, and really it is the extent of the flamesthat produces the most conspicuous and at the same time the most terrible phenomenan accompanying the swift progress of the "RED PLACUE"::

The unusual character of the ernomous forest fires was strongly maintained by many investigators, and certainly gains support from the vast clouds of smoke sent higher into the air than any volcanic cruption by the force of the heated draughts of the flames. The quantities of smoke from ernomous smudgs fire to which is due the ernomous extent od darkness, and also sunless days over smuch extensive territory , leads to the same condusion. Many scientists indeed while admitting the agency of flames to the overheated country all around the red playe look upon this as the cause of so much sickness starting in so many scations of the country, to en increase of the Consumption rate and other lung diseases caused by improper breathing due to so much posionous smoke vapor in the airs for instance Professor Mic-Malon of the 8t Michaels Catholic Scientific School smid to the swarm of the 8t Michaels Catholic Scientific School smid to the swarm of boy and girlscouts attending his classesome day to hear his oration;

"My dear brave little herues and heroines of the nation, these umusual forest file cutbreaks, are the cause of the everheated w mather weather throughout the nation, and therefore the whole country some to be subject to such tremendous heat, that when the conditions are right its pentupenergry breaks forth , and causes heat waves to centin us even far beyond the season average. The process by which this unusual unseasonable heat waves becomes so extensive in this manner is a long and yet very much misunderstanding one. Some contend that the extensive forest"fire murricanes" cause it, but this theory is not generally accepted. The toomen belief by down little boys am girls is that the forest fire heat is undiated by the winds off the direction of the blazes, and therefore this process of heat can be extended by the various land winds nearly as far as the winds can carry them.... And each additional heat wave from each additional frest fire, while not being extreme at the greatest distance from the blaze neverthelms adds to the temprature of the weather just as the sun does, during the hottest july day. When the radiance of the heat wave of the forest fire has traveled to a distance of a few hundred miles to me and villiages even that far have been so terribly subjected to such a terrific heat spell even above season normal for the hottest Summer that the people have fled to save themselves. This hint general d steam I on rivers and lokes. The heat of the flames of the forest files had sometimes too held the blaze in a state of frightful tension so that even games made by conflagrations had exploded with tremendous force .. This view boys and girls is very probably applicable to in many comes, and the exceedingly immense smoke clouds which so much less from the sandges of the resupertions of the conflafration, has deabtless for one of its causes the extensive darks ease over someth territory in Culverinia, and for the strange color phenomena elsewhere put that is the sole mode of the fire which is very questionable. It centainly does not agree with the immense volumes of smoke increased by small rains when fises of such extreme intensity as that now raging at Evangeline St Claire very strongly lead to the co-conclusion that sometimes people had fought the bla-co-blaze by thursting a levee and that a great mass of water has made its way through the burning smadge of peat bogs and other fires produced by the conflagration, and instead ofputtingout the blazes expleed into steam with a suddeness which gave it the rending force of dynimits or otherpowerful chemical explosives and made situations worse than better.

As in one way children the easy is believed to be so intimately associated with the forestities, that they are accused as being the cause of both fire and explosion, and also flood disasters, and the explosions toochildren like those at Abbieann have produced such shock disasters that they were suspected as you know well to be earthquakes. As to the leadinte couse 6 these explosions and the forest files there is no doubt considerable difference of upn opinion.But I think it willnot be doubted that the enemy is the main consequence, though perhaps the main one. They remotely too responsible for the fires which are the chief disasters to mbe mentioned. As this great fire pague is gradually getting worse, while the floods are gradually declining it follows from the law that we have already so often had occassion to use the term*that we're all either In Purpatury or in Hell"for not even committing min. Do doubt the exposious of people from so many towns and villiages due to the intense heat of the weather, and the smokey atmosphere must be exceedingly great, even in this short period of time. The cause hureer is continually in operation, and accordingly, the disasters of the war had been from time to time been accommodated to the fot that as your comrade Mildred Maxwell says the whole resistance of the christian armies to both fires and the enemy seems to be lessening. We hope however that that is a mistake. Yet at some points our success in this strif is gradually declining, for the enemy is grasping mue of Calverinia every month. We may hope to admit now however that I use to be a quanity too small to be measured by any observations as yet obtainable, but its a fact that'll he disasterous is if overlooked too long. It follows from these considerations that at various points the christian symics because of the great Mes and the intercepting floods must have a lessening number every day and none coming in to reinforce them as so many had to join in fighting the files. These armies must necessarily submit to compression by the three form, one human, and the other two natural, they must submit either continuously or from time to time, and the necessary yellding of the armies before the conflagrations will and is in general tobing place where they are too small in numbers for offering successful resistance. These acts of compression dear children of Abbie annia is fortunately not proceeding with uniformity, but rather with small successive shifts, and even though the displacements of the whole lung line of christian resistance in these shifts be actually very small yet the pressure to which the armies are subjected by the triple fue are so wast that if something is not done soon, a vary on 11 shift or withdrawal may soon correspondend to a very great disaster to us all Suppose children for instance that there is a slight shift during a battle elong a fifty or sixty mile front in the christian lines between two ernormous wings of troops at a length of three hundred feet. It must be remembered that the pressure of an enemy assault would be about the force and weight of an overwhelming number of insane men against it. Even a slight displacement overone extensive line over another, the sides being pressed together by the violence of the assault with a force of a race on the square inch would soon be an operation necessarily accompanied by violence along the whole line greatly exceeding that exceeding that which we might dildren expect from so small a displacement if the forceful attack concerned had been of more ordinary magnitude. Do you Understand my meaning Yes. Well children on account of this great addition of the intensity of the assault, merely a small rearerrangement of the christian line in persuance of the necessary work of accoundating the volume of assault to the perpetual shrinkage, might produce soon an excessive violent and disasterous defeat extending far and wide if rainforcements do not be sent on time. The effects of such an attack would be of course in waves upon waves of men as you've already seen in battles, just as a violent blow given atone end of a ber of iron by a sledg harmer is propagated through the ber in the form of waves. Indeed when the effect of this war adjustment reaches all our activis christian armies in Calverinia it might some time be great enough to disable the whole cause or all the armies fighting here. And the assaults may become so violent that no armies may be able towithstand it no how, snymme than a "u building can withstand a violent earthquake. Such is the threatening phenomena of the war now. Foe, gire, Shocks of explosions, pestilence, discoungement, and the fires of the forests.

When such a long christian line i of resistance is shaken by one of these enforced adjustments of the broken portion which I have described children, the wave of attack that would spread like a pulsation from the center of wars agitation would soon extend all along the whole resistance, and would be transmited right through it. Taking advan tage of this the enemy would create a violent shock of an attack, and might be made powerful enough to produce destructive effects. The enemy for instance seems to take advantage of the recent results of the Abbieann disaster whether he is guilty of it or not. The convulsion from those explosions children, was monifisted over a far larger area of country in a way which makes the shock felt than supposed or thought of, though the demage wrought was slight. However beyond the limited distance from the center of the disaster there had been no destructive effects upon buildings, and did not even cause vibrations that was felt by ordinary observatories. In each locality of this war zone children in which the shocks of battles have a been cronic it did seem as if there was a peculiar violence in the artillery fire too much power in the shells, and too great explosives to be used by either side. A shrinkings in the resisting christian line in the course of the incassant adjustment between the interior and the exterior had taken place bet in many armies by occassional small lengths. The fact that in christian lines the enemy do force the formation of these weak spots at wi which small adjustments are possible may be provided as it were "A safty valve "of hattle for other portions of the christian lines if reinforcements arive in time. Then instead of a general with drawel, the christian line would be stronger. In this way we may explain the fact that immense sections of all the whole war line are so far practically free from battle disasters beams of the ability of their commanders, while is it is a fact too that in less fortunate armies the disasters have been very severe.

Now suppose another battle soon takesplace right here near the Abbieann territory, if there's plenty of artillery in action it'll originate a series of vibrations through the land as long as it continues. We must here distinguish b etween the two foes .-- I might almost say the compat comparatively strong bodds of contending armins -- which formup for a gigantic battle and open with intensely severe artillery fire/ The vibrations caused by the artillery and great explosions which carry the tidings of the outbreak of the battle, soon spreads through from town to town from the centre of the disturbance in gradually enlarging circles. We may liken the spread of these battle vibrations to the ripples in a big pool of water which diverge from the spot where a stone was thrown into it. Th The vibrations transmitted by the explosions of so many big shells, explosions of munitions, great thunders of so many hundreds of hig cannons per minute will carry the message over a good part of the country if not all over the earth. If the ar illery fire is unusually seare, or if unu sally terrific explosions occur the vibrations will be corres pondingly large and will sure ly travel o with vigor over the whole land. The Abbieann explosions reached as far north as the city of Pandora Abbieunnia three thousandmiles away and set the pencil of the seis ometer so violently at work that the very pencil(not the lead) was broken. But there are different ways round out country, from Calverinia to Abbieannia States, the most direct route being across Angelini a State, Abyssinkile and Ange, ine Angeline wine, the other route across Domdobia, Tripongonlia and elsewhere. The vibrations of those explosions children traveled also by these routes and the former was the shorter of the rest.

Sme breif repation may not be here smiss children as to the general cutcome of the forest fires, and other disasters of the war itself, of which much has been said in the proceeding pages of the of future volumes of our own histories espainly as many of the terms have been to some extent unusual in character. The most abundant of these great forest fires is steamer water those of Southeast Galverinia which dear children as we have seen issues in prodigious fury over all our heautiful for est lands during its wild progress. No doubt in your adventurious travels you have seen many of these great hims blazes. But with the progress of these forest fires a great number of other disaster, horrors frequently make their appearance. Though we have known of a great number of these even from the beginning of the disaster, it will not be out of order for any of you to repeat of what you had experienced of the disaster has. What did you exprience beloares!"

"The chief among our experience"she answered was to three or four times run through a gountlet of those flowes. The chif among the towns we heard of that were menunce were Evangeline St Claire, Trinoque, Sepsenterminia, and Double Dayton, and I say it was a miracle that they were not het."

"You are right"said the Professor .. "And the h . heat w was of these forest fires ree t upon one enother, and therefore many new conflagration horrors are therefore formd. By the action of these flames the ruin of our forests are general. I saw myself a portion of the immense forest fire burn upthe slopes ofone ofour Volcences called Mt Joan I believe, and the red glowing light of the smoulders left by the passage of the flames was seen more than a hundredmiles away. Such draudful frest fires however were scarcely ever heard of bfore. The glowing sea of embers looked to me like a great lake of red red but molten lava which reflected from the clouds of snoke from it as much as the 1 khts of a great city are reflected from the water vapor of the atmp atmosphere during cloudly weather at night. Pesites the progress of all these swful disasters children which is terrifying the whole world itself, there are many other catastrophes to boot. and these have so accumulated in numbers till they have buildedup mountains of horror of vast dimensions, like, Lake Selicia, Abbieunn, and the great disasters of the west. Some of these also or every one of them is suspected of having been caused or being originated by the enemy, ' for they evidently are not Natural disasters

, these disasters having extended for severel hundred miles, and one explusion was said to have had the force of a volcente cruption for the blast had hurid upwards fragements of debris as high as they would have been by a volcanic cruption, and scattered far and wide over the fac face of the country. But the principal force of some of these explosion disasters is also suspected to be originated by forest fares or by the highly heated stmospher e produced by them. It is to this cause that the names "Calverinia Purgagories Purgatories" are applied.

Big forest fires do cortainly at a close distance present all the appearances of the approachof the Worlds ends, and when we come to study the progress ofone of these blazes and notice even the chemical act o action some of them produce from the very soil, and the hellish n ature of the rolling seas of impenetrable smoke, however we shall find that there are many respects,, in which they may differ entirely from some of the other kinds, they consisting of what sort of trees of course that the conflagration burns. In spend, they may be slow, fast, or at a race or exp ess express train speed as in the case when they go before a wild wind. The steam and other gases also seen during progressive former, forest fires . These forest fires have var ed varied greatly in character according to the nature of the material it has burned ans and is burning. In the man majority of cases the conflargrations burn over open forest country with lots of ground rubbish growing and the distansion of such a mass of smoke that is produced by it gives rise to the fm formation of such rolling clouds as to appear like huge volcanic eruptions in the distance to which the name"Fat Fake Emption"ci is applied. But when the forest fire of this sort grows to an immense size the liberation of so much smoke gives rise to the reported statement of a whole territory in "Volcanic Eruption for scores of miles.

Half ofour forests consist of the dangerous Turpentine trees, and the mamount of flames these will and do produce is ernormous. We have seen to what a vast extent the flames becamen when it struckthe forests forests east of Evangeline St Clairs. For weeks seas of flame were reported extending and as existing in the vinicity on the main line of blave as far as Solomon Run covering the sky over the country to such an extent with smoke and flame that it frightened the inhabitants throughout the territory into believing their last time has come. This forest fire therefore has a commulated into such a quantity of smoke and flames that sometimes it is even difficult to determine its very progress or what direction its moving flames from this blaze has been said to be seen leaping many hundreds of feet into the structure and created heat felt hadly for fifty sailes. Thus children it has been related by one of the Gemini who watched theyprogress of the fie as it threatened Evangeline St Claire before and after the battle there. that during the earlier stages of its advancing mo eme movement flames of ernomnous size into forms of rolling white hot douds rose high in the air, and the clouds of smoke filled the atmosphere producing a darknoss in the city of Evangeline St Claire that is claimed ai ht might have been felt.go excessivle was the smoke even at that distance from the flames that it penetrated tightly closed windows, and the most closely fastened receptacles, and filling rooms so completely that people had to wear gas masks to avoid suffocation as they fled from the threatened city.

This smoke from its Turpentine our odor showed what the flumes were burning. These however are terms of convienence only, and do not always pr properly describe the materials what is burning ."

Sometimes the passage of the fies through such a forest produces large quantities of ashes still smouldering hot for days.

"How many fites are there by now!"esked Radcliffe . "It is not by an means anceasy task to frame ancestimate of the n number of forest fires now raging in Calverinia and elsewhre." he answered. "and the forest fires now raging ascI said be fore vary greatly in their size and heat, from vast conflagrations more than a hundred miles in extent, with flames rising to a height of n early two thousand five hundred feet, to mere immense snoke fires. They are likewise exhibiting everypossible stage of development, and of smouldering while some are in a state of cronic hurning and progress others are reduced to mere smudge fires and ground fires and to the condition of "SmokeSeas", and others again having once hurned over am n and meeting with nofurther fuel are burning themselves out." "But what about --- ?"

"I'm just coming to that even boys and girls if we confine our attention to the larger forest fires now raging, which merit the nume of "General Conflagrations" and such of these as we have reason to believe are the main ones to be r dreaded, the danger to our property is increased, and not by any means rejuved removed. Forest fires if not finding any more fuel can easily burn out of their own accord, but if they are carred out by a wind they'll cross the wide open space and renew the burning, and it is quite poss bly possible in many cases to distinguish between the conditions of a "combination"forest file. "and a "Smudge."

"Wht do you meanthy smudge" . ?

"The smoker."

"I see."

"We shallhowever dear child scouts, probably be within the limits of truth in stating that the number of great big forest fires throughout the whole State of Calverinia which we have reason to believe are keeping the whole country in so much derkness or luck of aunshine and smoky atmosphere, is somewhere between four hundred and four ... hundred and fifty . Most of these are marked by more or less conflagrations beyond all human or natural control, burning trees composed of the highly inflamable pine of the " Parsley"type and the other sort that has the sap(Turpentine Pine) called Turpentine. But if we include forest fires which exhibit the appearance of the scenes of the infernal regions, and other features of the fierceness of the Hellish places, yet concerning the results of which we have norecord as no one sa stays to witness the scene, the number will fall little. if anything, short oft Ttoot I.000 blazes ."

"One thousand blazes! Aw Goon ?" "Yes indeed"Radeliffe. The forest fires composed of blazes burning these trees, are still more numerous when you call them sudges or smoulders, and the smaller temporary files or ones just starting which are usually subordinate to the progressive flames that have burned over ground rubbish must benumbered by thousands and willsoon flare up into big ones sconer or later. There is said even now to be still feebler manifestations of the forest fire terrors, such as sauke seas", smoulders, wand flaring seas, that may be reckuned by millions. It is not improbable that these less powerful forest fires to a great extent make up in number what they want in individual energy, and the relat that thewinds may afford to the underground imprisoned energies of the smoulders may be almost equal to that which results from the occassional outbirsts of the greater conflagrations.

In taking a general survey of the forest fire phenomena ofour mastern Calverinia lands, no facts children amount more strikingly than that of the very unequal distribution, both of the great conflagrations, and of the minor ones. Thus on the whole of the Mastern Calverinia it had seemed to combine recently into one big forest fire that especial especially southeastern Calverinia -- and this is raging ever north ward. Across the streams, small lakes and riers of that section however there are or have crossed no less than six ernormous blazes, namely, the Starring Junction Fire, and Easter River blaze in central east Calverinia, the East Aronburgs Run in the same ad section, Gra hams Forest, and the Cedernine and Evengeline St Claire morror raging near the Aegean Beadon Territory ...: The State of Angoline Vivme itself is at presentknown to contain shout ten immonse furest fires that are burning -----four on the west coas t(boast) and six in the Eastern pa t part of the state, while about ten other immense forest fires believ believed to be at set by the enemy occur in the adjoining State of A Angeline Vine. "It seems unusual sir."

"It dos indeed. But children upon examining further into the strange distribution of these great forest fires, another very interestingfact presents itself .Do you know what it is children?"

"I believe I do."said Dolores raising her hand.

"What is it polores!"

"Why friend Professor, the forest files are in almost every instance raging either along our mountain rages, or close to the coast of the countries, at some great distance from them, or in forested plains, valleys and the like."

"You are right, and your exprience shows that"said the Professor. "What else do you say. You should know as you have had suchexprience. !"

"Why there are indeed two exceptions to this rule."

"And wat is that child?"

"In the great and wholly forested regions of the Mic-Hollester Run River Region lying between Evangeline St Claire city, and Calverine, four of the greatest of all forest fires are raging, and in the northern frested plains of Angelinia State , and in the Calverinian Province of Selicia several others. That is from what I observed from reading the news. However sir more reliable information is however needed con cerning these forest fres."

"It's a remarkable dircumstance that you mention this said the Prop Professor."I didn't even know that. But what else do you know of it?" "I know that nearly one third of the Vivian Hills covered with forests composed of fir pine are all aflame, and many others of these

"Astonishing if true. I know that that ridge of hills runs through eastern Celverinia, and if fires are raging there these hills have therefore divided the forest fires into two immense sections. But how fierce is those conflagrations that you have read off?"

"Why sir upon this ridge the fires have gained such fury according to the papers that over the ridge and the forested spurs proceeding from it, the papers and informers had said that there rise numerous mouth mountainous masses of flames, which constitute the well known fires of that locality. to the condition of general conflagrations."

The Professor paused for a moment to wine his spectacles and then he continued;"If the great chain of these forest fires presents us with an example of a chain of mountains all aftre as you said, we have too in the adjoining line of the Bondons hills an example of a similar on range of hills all are aftre or going to f be ufire, and which conflagrations are in a terrible rage. I've heard that in the region of Angelinia Agathia, there are twelve big forest fires burning, in the Glinda Territory thirty one, and near Humbi City abouid three. The Chain of the St Michael Hills contains at least ten fires, and the Territories east of Bengal County about twenty five big blezes. The great group of cities lying in that territory at this present time is 5 near the scene of the grandest forest fire disasters. No less than fifty great fires are threatening these scores of cities and hundrefs of towns and villiages. Whirther Rost, the sem chain of fice is sail be to be continued by the force hig blozes of New Calverinia. one ormere hig smudges or pround files, and several higs higones a ear the nouthern Boundary of Abresinkila, the Solomon River territory and the New Viania, the three big free of New Curren State, and no saibly by the fires burning in the Extreme northeast Calverinia region. Altogether no less than one hundred and fifty [west files exist along this territory, and if we include the many smidge files and valley blazes which appar to be eithered on lines branching from this marticular band, we shall not be wrong in the against on that this great at system of swful forest files unclude at least one quarter of the forested territories of our Abbisonnian Southern Provinces. In addition to the great number of awful Combination itaks fires there are here several hundred very perfect extensive moukey ones many of which to incestimators appear to have recently come into existance, though some of them may be already fu'l grown. A third series of great forest fires, starts from the neighborhood of the Northern Carvature of the Grand Vivian Hills, and these ftes stratches a great distance along the ax extreme southeastern mountain territories. This upper section of blazes so it is said however is much less continuous, but nevertheless very severe, and contains with its branches nearly a hundred saudge files. On the north of this great hander is almostunited with the one we have already spoken off in southwestern parts of Rostern Colverinia which has been menancing Angelinia Agathia so often. In the Glorianna region there had existed a number of forest fires, one of which burned through the Henrietta territory is believed to have destroyed T8,000,000 acres before it was brought under. Furtyer north in the territory of the Um ited States of Calverinia, a number of grand forest fires still exist sums of which are probably the most immense of all, for terrible darkness from much smoke is observed, and many other manefestation a abound. From the southern extremity of the region west of this territory an almost continuous chain of forest fires stretches through Gautenel Cautemala State and from this part of the forest fire band a branch was reported given off which is burning through the West Guatemala Junction Territory, and contains some of the most dreaded forest files of all. However in all of Southern Calverinia theline is continuous by the forest fires of the Provinces of Ecuador, Bolivia, and Chili but at many intermediate points of the fire chain great smudges and terrible smokers are occuring which is to a great extent filling up the gaps in the series. A small offshoot to the westward passes through the St Ann Territory. The great band of forest fires which is said to he stretching through the northern Angeline Vine Province is second only in importance, and in their burning. The third forest fire band of the Province of Culverinin on that already spoken of which traverses the Galverinin east from northeast to northwest. This series of gigantic forest files is however such more fr broken and interrupted than the other two, and a greater portion of them are great mackers..

Reginning in the north with the forest fires of Greens Junction and Glady's Territory we pass northwestverd by way of the countsins to the Bn Rengall States. Thence by way through Evangeline St Claire and from allthis band two branches of forest fires are proceeding to the westward, one through central eastern Galverinia, where all the fires are now reneral, and the other through the north the great majorit majority of these fires bely; snokers, though a few are blazes. The Fires on the shatern schat of Calvarint a may be regarded as situated on another branch from this bigger land. The number of those Thes do not exceed fifty.

From what has been said, it will be soon that the terrible forest fires of "Mastern Calverinia not only usually assume a terrifically long wave formation, but mostly the whole of these dreadful conflagrations have been seen to form up into seething infernal regions along three well marked seas or bands, and the flaming smoking branches proc eeding from them. The first am and most important of these bands is said by one of the news papers to be negricy Itoobh I,000 smiles in length and with its branches containes more than one hundred and fifty ernormous sister conflagrations, the fiercest has burned along an eight thousand fro mile front in six months and includes one hundred immeasureable conflagrations, the third is much more broken and iterrupted, extending already to a length of nearly two thousand miles, and contains about fifty immensureable seas of fires. The Forest fires of Northeastern Angelinia States, with Bengall State, Angeline Vine and other Eastern Provinces may be regarded as you will as forming a forth and subordinate hand. Thus children of The similes we soe that the surface of Calverinia and her sisteryProvinces seem to be covered by a new network of great forest fire lines all of which connection between the two great fire bonds. To this rule the movement of these immensurable conflagrations and their accumulation alongcertain well maked bands there are two very striking exceptions, which children we must now proceed to notice, and we'll all understand how far the destruction of our traverse intheir simucus lines of waves with a general north and south direction giving off branches because of the winds which often also run for hundreds of miles and sometimes threaten fo to form a forests have proceeded up to thismonth.

In the very Center of our Calverinian country there is the largest andmost unbroken forest land of the Nation, and should those fires come up to here there'll he a fire that'll draw the attention of the whole world. The progressive movements of these dreadful conflag rations has not reached this far yet. The f res forest fires do not yet appear within sight of this region but it only seems to be on very doubtful evidence, and many have gone out to do all sort of work to prevent the Red Plague from spreading here. The only accounts we have of the danger threatening are contained by the facts that the fires are reallly moving in that direction. The existance of these dreadful fires coming tward that way ofwhich only obscure warnings had reached the forest rangers appears bto be completly established by travlers, alignal stations and by observers on high observatories. Three Forest fire storms appear to be moving tward that locality, and other forest fire phenomenea have been stated to appear in sight in the great forested plateau of Central Calverinia. The efforts of many scores of thousands of forest fire fighters, and the prayerful hop hope that the winds maintain a westerly direction is only that the blaz e will be held back . The second exceptionally endungered spot is that of extreme Central Colverinia, right in a territory where we are now. While the Evangeline St Claire Territory fires have already advanced into an unbroken ocean of fire, and threaten the edge of the loftiest forests of all Calverinia, the forest fires of the Trinoque districts have fortunately advanced in a northeasterly course and thus you have been able to travel on without ,uch hinderence though a branch of it struck the furests recently near Lebanon. All in that district is said to haune of the largest forest fires ever r agin g raging and some observers said the smoke from the .wo thousand feet of flaming clouds must be rising from 22,000, to 33,000 fathoms up ward tward the sky in such unbroken clouds as to shut out all daylight over the country in the far eastand the clouds have culminated into such ernormous masses, that if the wind is east, the whole sky even to the Western sections of Abbi annia is covered, or the sun doesn't shine over the whole country and into the 'ic-Whirthian seas, or if the winds are west, the same is in that direction. This forest fire horror is and to be surpassing all the rest in horror and height of fluses and smoke from the immeasureable turmentine forests that are burning. Thus forest fire is unsurpassed probably by any other fire on the whole scale."

"And we are close to it in this territory?" asked Jane Mellfort, while all the other child scouts looked aghast.

I "Indeed we are. With the exception of the two main isolated seas of flames of other blazes, and of this hig one regingup from The Evangeline St Clairs, and Trinoque districts, nearly all of the other fies in the country are raging near the limits which seperate the greater blaze by gaps. The fact of the general proximity of forest fires to the main endangered section is one which has frequently been pointed out recently to investigating geographers of the Abbicannian Geography or Geographical Societies, and may now be regarded us being throughoutly established as the fircest conflagration raging ever known on record. Many of our grandest mountain choins covered with furests is lying parallel to those advancing seas of fire. This too is strikingly exhibited by the great fire masses which ismoving across the extreme eastern forests of Calverinia in the Donohue and Bicknell Provinces. The Bondon Hills which consisted of forested mountains to their very summits are not yet in the path of the conflagration but are in grave peril. At m ny many points however ... slong the sides of these grain chains of forested mountains we find that such forests exist that while make fine fuel for the adfuncing "Red Plague from which ernormous wayes of fde can burn. These forests too cover great tracts of level country. The fire is already especially raging in marked size in the Angeline Run River Corested plain of Mortheastern Angelinia State and through other sections but this fire is traveling just now southward. Also in this and the adjoining regions of Angeline Vine State of Concentinia, on ernormous tract of forest country is threaten c threatened, and this c forest covers enough coun try surface to a larger area than France and Great Britan combined.

The Angeline Run River cuts through this endem gered foest in a series of beautiful pucturesque windings and stretches, in small gorges and shallows, and the thickness of the forest is so that you cannot in many parts get through except by roads. If thes This blazes up there'll be some fire-Louked at from any point on its surface one section of this forestedplain appears as a forest of those strangely beautiful Parsley appearance but the forest are all of Tunpentine sap and Heaven help the country if the blaze reaches here. Thus uniformity had been produced by no doubt manyages of tree groupth and if the fire would come up it may literily roll over the plein in an undulating contour or in successive waves of flame that may heaten the heavens as to dry up the upper atmosphere and give us no rain at all or cause such rains as to wash us out of existence,

The forest fire so far have either rolled up the nountain sides or has followed the streams as the waters of a 1 k lake follow its promontories and bays. Similiar conditions exist along the whole eastern Calverinia territory, and of many localities the flames are said to be ragingupward to such a height and dimensions as to overlook and dwarf the mountain ranges by the side of which they rave race and leapp. Risewhere we can find still more striking examples of parallelsim between great mountain side forest fires, and the fires traveling along the level forested lands, folloing the line of fie to the great eastern wave which extend so far while traveling north ward. There are som some other fde bands which exhibit a similiar paralleism with mountain chains, but on the other han d, there are smu smoky and smudgy forest [des between which, and the nearest mount ain axis no such connection can be traced because the whole territory is obliterated in great seas of rolling smoke towering far into the sky and acrosss the country in unbroken seas of cloud. There is one other fact concerning the mode of distribution of forest files upon the surface of our Calverinian country, to which we must allude. By a study of the evidence presented on the advancing side by en dless high walls of impenetrable rolling clouds of smoke, fluming seas, and terrific heat, and other phenomena of a similiar kind # can be shown that certain wide I areas of the forested lan d and of the mountain ranges, are at presence menanced by the great files. And the observation of the Forest geologist prove that similar movements of the progressive for est fires have been going on since the first days they started to become so immense. No Now children as Mr Hendro Darger has so well shown in his investigation work on "Calverinian Red Plagues" if we trace upon a map here on the wall the ae areas of forested sections of Calverinia which are in the path of the terrible conflagration we shall find that nearly all the dreadful conflagratiojs conflagrations are ragin g upon rising areas more than in levelones. Nevertheless all the fires have a significance that is well worthy of fuller consideration. There are facts kno .. which point to the cause of this c state of affairs. It is not uncommon for small fixes to be formed by the bigger ones when great windstorms are raging in the fire districts. These are undoub edly the start of new ones caused by winds t a carrying into the air the burning embers from the parent fires. In fact such child fires soon grow into parentkind of their own. It is believed by geologists that such a system of files.

fires are ranged along similarlines as others are, though there are at present errormous breaks between one of them extending for thirty miles but along with these immense forest fires there appear in place of them sumtimes scenes as of powerful eruptions of a whole country sides. The greatest of these fies is that to which we are so close. It doubtless marks the line of mighty force of conglagrations or conflagrations which have been in rage since September 1912 last year.

"Oh it ain't that "enswered the girlscout Mildred to general Aronburge "But I've learned that general Clancy had planned to have so e Glandelinian ap ies pay a great price to anyone to have you and all of us put out of the way. They are crazy with the desire to kill you because general Henson thrush Clancy at Lebanon, and you take Manleys chances town the conflicts away, from him, and his ermies force unusual dienster. Maybe he has paid others too, maybe Manley paid Clancy to do it too if he deres. I don't know. But general Manley and Clancy swear that they will get you yet. And And general Calmannia Shoemannsias out of the game for a time."

"Where are their armies row?"

"I do not know just now answared Mildred."I guess they have retreated southeastward or westward to concentrate or get under cover somewhere near the town of Marie Kornmann. And I want to tell you something more general."

"What is it Mildred."

The rescally glandelinian general Manley promished ten thousand dollars for the job of stabbing Gertrude and Penrod."
"Promished to pay who?"

"That boy scout Gerald Starring."
"What else did you learn wildred!"

"That darn Clancy promished general Lethance two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for a terrible job of getting enough men to work hard enough to force a great forest fire heading northward from the Lebanon territoryuptward your army."

"what's that?"

"For to got 10:000 men to sent the forest fire this way."
"So that's the plan of the glandelinians is it?"demanded the general furiously.

"Yes indeed for Your Excellency. I and my band of girlscouts with each boys captured three fellows in the act of trying to start a new one close by near the south shore of the Mic--Hollester Run River and from the explosion of a shell aimed at me I fell into the water and almost was drowned."

"Mildred will you sign your name to that. ?"

"No sireNot now I wants You want me to be detected. You frustrare those rescals first"replied the little girlscout. "To morrow we all want you to head northward for Abbleanne"

General Concentinian Aronhurg thought this was a charactestic occupat ion for himself to takeup since it had before afforded him several months of idleness since he had not for a long time been engaged with the enemy, and through the fault that so far all enemy armies at his approach would run away like a floring rabbit.

"You have your big raft closs by?"he asked remembering his plan to occupy the northern shores near the flood remaining at Abbiennass. "Tes sir"Said Mildred. Everythin g is well furnished on the big raft."

"Gould you take me and all my generals on board the raft to morrow when the army starts on the move."

"With Gentrudes paraission I could sin if there's no fire menancing us, as the stream runs through dense forests on knows But we got to go while the winds on the northwest else we can't make the territory by water at all in this dreadful forest fire weath r weathere We got to leave at four in the morning...:"

"I can't got my staff generals ready by then. What time could we start on the raft later in the day."

"Not till ten oclock in the morning maybe."

"What time will we get there?"

"Depends on the app speed of the advance of the army.But we got to keep our eyes open for the fire. The Professor told of this late morning of the danger in the Classroom of your headquarters.We're apparently in the path of the worst blaze of all."

"Be ready with the raft at ten then acid the general with decisions:

It seemed to be practically his last behance for six mon the of ever reaching there if he didn't take the opportunity to start now.

1 To 1 (14) (15)

Therefore he was determined to go forward, even if he had to start at dangerous times. He sent a messenger with a note to his higher general assistant general Jude asking him to get all his steff general officers on board the raft before ten oclock. Then he wrote his daily wireless .

Manageb message to Violet, and her sisters, and also to Jennie Turmer. He mentioned his projected movement northward but nohing else just then excepting his love for them, and his howes hopes which were weighty enough. As he entered the military telegraphic office to have it sent on he saw a bunch of fellows disappear from sight around the corner of the place after they had looked at him very curiously . He had also sewral several times noticed a certain v furtiveness in their regard but had each time ascribed it to imagination and dismissed the matter. This time when he saw them rush off he was tempted to draw his pistol but didn't have the chance quick enough. He was comingout however when he saw a boyse'u boysecut standing by the officer.

"Genral Dupond says he's ready to move forward sire "he said. "Tell him I'll ride down and speak to him."said the general.

He rode tward whre that gen ral had his own headquarters. It was a triflying trifling matter about which he wanted to see general Dp Dupond.Dupond was sitting on the front steps, talking to general Sladerlinia. As he approached general Aronburg saw the two cease their conversation and look at him. Then Sladerlinia after saluting rode away to his duty. Dupond who had just recieved the message from the boyscout stood motionless where he had been waiting. General Aronbu g Aronburg became suddenly conscious of an atmosphere of danger. When he reachd Dupond, the old general eyed him with a searching and warning stare. But now the eyes that blazed a foot from his own did not relax their gaze. There was a warning there, benediately, and friendly however, something that the general was aware of though the face was immobile. It flashed through general Aronburgs mind, that the general had recieved som sort of warnin g from gladerlinia, that probably they must know that the Glandelinian armies were gone made Disregarding the captian generals look General Aronburg explained braftly the matter on which he had come. All the while he spoke general Dipund continued eyeing him.

General Aronburg wondered what was on the general saind.

"Well is that clear?"he inquired.

"That much is clear. "unswered the general somewhat reluctantly. "Well wht's the matter then?"ge general Aronburg demanded sharply. "Suddenly he perciaved that the old generals face was twi ted with passion. His expression was so fanatical that general Aronburg thought he was going to attack him. But the face resumed its mask again, and with a solute and a word Took out for yourself general you're in grave danger, swung into the saddle, and urged on his horse. At a distance he halted.

"Be careful general. "he said. "Watch your step. You're shadowed by secret enemies, and some of them are Glandelinian boy and girls couts in the ranks of ours."

Sladerlinia's horse had halted next to two trees. As Dupond crossed the road tward his command, general Aronburg saw sinderlinia on the read.General Aronhurg moved by a sudden impulse redeup to general gladerlinia and accounted him. "General"he said"There is danger lurkin g for our arsies.General Dupond told me so. I didn't know whether you had knowledge of it or not."

General Sladerlinia lookedup. The little mans face was like a thunder cloud. He clenched and unclenched his fists fiercely and muttering. He stood still in confusion for an instant for general Aronburgs approach seemed to have surprised him.

"We won't let the enemy get whead of us. "he cried and the tears began to stream down his cheeks. "Dook out for shadowers. They man to assassinate you ."

And saluting he rode awayslowly leaving general Aronhurg utterly nonplussed at his behavior. .

When general Aronburg driving furiously homeward reached his head quarters he saw the solitary figure of Marie Stanck seatedouside the door. He let his horse rest for a breathing spell before continuing up the hill doffed his hat and saluted her. Noone the generalknew had ever been able to force a smile from her lips. And too he knew that all Glandelinian generals dreaded this girlscout Mary Stanck, the Glandelinians had hated the presence of her name, but hehimself had never been aware before of the presence of that little giracouts figure upon the porch or steps before, which had been always there always there whenever he rode back and forthto his own headquarters/. Some of the other generals had forgotten to tell the general Aronhurg all that was soon to come to pass. But the menance of med danger that the christian armies were faccing was spreading in such a way th t that showed it greater than usual. General Jules Dupond neveron e of many words however knewnore than most other generals, he was general Aronburgs advisor and always gave himwarnin gs not bytioth by words but by looks. During the past week toovduring some of the past adventures on the raft or on shore Mary Stanck alone had been terrified at the way a strange sor sort of Abbi annian soldier always looked at her, and sometimes at the rest, and the way he examined the raft and counted the numbers of the boy and girlscouts and so one. From his ways he had never meant at first very much to her, and now she was suspicious. While she was sitting here her mind went traveling back to her earliest memory. She was in the little villiage of Growton with her parents, watching for the return of her brother and sister from school, and her fathers brother, and often had come along a certain mun that had warned her parents to flee from the territory as the enemy was advancing. The tragedy she remembered occured during her fathers absence. The young man who was hermothers cousin was laughingly inviting her mother to go for a buggy trip. At last her mother had consented. The trip was a longone. Mary who had fallen asleep, was awakened by the sound of her mothers screaming, and saw from the win dow the young man brunght into the house covered with blood. At first she did not understand all that had happened at that time, and her next memory was of a hospital in Calverine and her mothers and fathers tear stained face, and a sense of great unhappiness. She remembered standing beside the hospital bed on which her wounded and dying mother lay, and the mortally injured mother gripping her hands fast in her burning ones was telling her over and over again and finishing with-- "Never forget how your dear mother and young cousin died Marie-Remember it and never forget. And carry it with thee through life. Now Swear by the Vigin to never forget. The frightenedlittle girl had sworn cetching the words from her mothers lips. Since then she had remembered the whole thing for it had become engraved upon her memory forever. But it was long before she understood its meaning. Then she remembered her fathers ornelty to her not from pure senses but that the loss of his wife so tragedly had driven him insens and heknew not what he was delage Ather that he died in his ravings after trying to stab her. The sight of her dying mother, and of her fathers insenity had in flicted a wound in the childs soul that never healed. This was the came too of her entering the army as a girls cout hoping, ardently hoping to see some day the Glandelinian secundrels who had killed her mother and her mothers cousin so brutally for she had recleved their descript description from her mother. N She never pretended to have forgotten as shemight well have done che locked back on an early child hood that had because of this been a torture.

The news of it all had brought the very community to her sympathy. Her loss made the little girl many worm friends ever where..One of the hoyscouts by the name of Jules Pedro had come to know her wall and had gotten the secrets of her sad life from her. To day Mary watched the christian cavarly soldiers that rode the to and fro down the road. At night while lying awake she had dremmed of seeing many Glandelinian s generals surmendering to the sirit of her father. Mary longed to see the time she could discover the murderers of her father mother and counsin for they had a hand in it too on him as they had indirectly caused his death to tilliant to toped goes

When she had learned of the Foriegner Clancy taking leadership of a wast Glantelinian non, she 's tel min-She had never though that an Irishman would side with the foe. She came to declare Clancy with the qualities of Baten himselfThe boyscout Pedro had formed on acquaintance with hereHe had the intuition of a goodly boyscout who helps his girl friends through thick and thin. He listened to her confidences shall given to one who by his wandering life, and through the tales that he told showed him to be the sort of boyscout that all could brust. Pedro listened to the sad story of her past life often andunderstood the poor little spiritual drama, and he was capable of understanding, and he decided to help her find her mothers murderers. At last it seemed she was getting her chance. P One of those whom sh her mother had described as no of the mirders had recently been eying herintently from a secret place and she had known it. Had he dared comecut she's have shot him right where he was and explained a themselve to the area for sair of his confiction.

In the meantime the famous battle stricken region of Lebanon which is now so const aconstantly threatened by the worse forest fire on a/1 all resord, was endangering general Hansons army so that he had to abandon his dead dearly bought fields and retreat for better quarters or safer places before the conflagration would come up. A large portion of the population of Lebanon had fled by now, and from other recently flourishing citds and towns in different locations. However so little at this time was the terrible nature of the dreaded conflagration app reaching that way understood, that many of the inhabitunts of these towns s still remained, though the & sky had been " growning darker every day and the glare of flames nearer every night.

The conflagration through which race tly recently stated which Violet, and her sisters had gone through had threatened the city. The on 1 way the people of the city had recleved the alarm was suddenly on that dread day of the mornings buttle of a terrific rush of meas of mnoke and fire seemingly to belch frum all the landscapes of the country and from the slope of a forested hill. The city of Labanon was fifty miles away and yet if when the inhabitants went on house tops they could see the flames ries high into the sky. The flames spread out like a vast white hot pall. For many hours this had went on, and the ernormous quanties of smoke rolling upward, together with a deluge of .water that suddenly fell because of some mysterious burst of a river leves produce produced torrents acrosss the country side which carrying onward many burning trees overwhelmed everything in their way. A gity sixteen miles away was speedily rendered uninhabitable became of the terrible heat felt so far away, and also from two others, while at Lebanon the temperature was nearly a hundred and thirty five.

There was one peculier disaster of extroardinary and almost ungunbelieavable kind that occured because of some mysterious explosion that was produced on a hillside because of the fire. A big city over seven miles away was remiered absolutely unimhabitable and was destroy ed by the deluge of falling stones, but two others, Crania, and Latoria wes filled with a flood of water mud and sad sand which came apprently down the side of the mountain and covering them up entirely. The latter city was several miles nearer the hill and was almost buried in rubbish of a,1 all sorts even from the burning forest debris, besides of burned foest ashes and an avalanche of loose stones and hig boulders. In succeeding explosions caused by the blaze which scientists couldn't makeout as to its cause much debris slide down mountains as if they were pouring rocks from eruptive craters, and the smoke clouds were so dark overhead even as far northwest as the city of Calverine Greenburg that much fear was caused in all parts of that country. The three cities effected by the mysterious explosions caused by the flames might as well have resembled Herculaneum and Pompeli.Fifteen thousand inhabitants perished and many of those who had managed toescape were more or less injured or prostrated by the fierce heat.

Violet, and her sisters, to whom general Concentinian Aronburg considered himself indepeted for the account of the great fire as it threatened the city of Lebanon and all the neighborhood three days after the battle, were at the time of the occurance of the passage of the great "RED P LAGUR" resident for the time being with general Hanson Vivian in the main Capitol building of the c city so bravely saved from the enemy, outside of which on the western suburbs lay his victorious christian army under the command of general Leon Meldon Bicknell one of the great christian commaders of his day. The account of one of the Vivian Girl Princesses, and signed by the signature of all, and Jennie Turmer too, was quite a narrative of the singular progress of the forest fires and its warnings, as a record of the fierce fight agains the flames in vain by the army when surprised and of the death of many trapped in the flames, and too it is of very great interest as youlding the impressions of the observers.

The description which follows was telegraphed by the Signal Station at Lebanon. The letter was given forth to general Aronburg entire, and of good examples of description showing that though little as they were, Violet, and her sisters seemed to have the tarlet of professional college teachers from their strong desire of schooling, and good behavior in the school when they went. The letter is as follows;;;

OCTOBER THE 8th I(1913. TO HIS EXCELLENCY GENERAL CONCENTINIAN ARONBURG. ABBIGANNIAN ARMY. ABBIEANN TERRITORY. SIGNAL STATION TO.

"I have recently recieved your request for the safty of your armi s that we from time to time afpossible should send you or your boy and girl scout regimental leaders an account of what we observe while we are away iccally. I have already recently sent you an account of the battle that was so brilliantly fought here in order to give you a more exact relation to it, and which from the results der deserves my acknowledgements, and that of my sisters, for if this battle shallsome day be celebrated by your pen, or Gertrudes, whom I'm glad to hear is recovering nicely, the glory of it I and my sisters are well assured will be rendered forever utiliastratttillastr ous be celebrated for its record and it will forver be also illustrious. And n otwithstanding that general Hanson lucked a general who became of his Mationality thought could never be beaten, which as it breezed at the same time a most beautiful country side into ruins, and destroyed so many lives seems to promise the cause and general Hanson himself a everlasting remembrance, notwithstanding he has himself composed many and lasting works on his own experience in this dreadful and devastating war yet I and my sisters are persauded the mention of his brother too in our own works and will hope to greatly contribute to eternize their names. Happy I esteem those, to be and so do my sisters whom Our Blessed Lord has distinguished with the abilities either of doing such actions in war which are worth, to be so often related or of relating them in a manner worthy to be read by all the word, but doubly happy are they who are blessed withboth these tarlen ts in the number of which many ofour generals including even yourself are justly to be ranked. It is with extreme willinglingness that I therefore, after holding council with my sisters execute the writings of our experience durin g the "World End"as we may call it and should ind indeed have claimed the task if you had not en joined it.

After the enemy had retreated from the territory, general Hanson with party of his army at our request took possession of Lebanon and the main army remained without on the west side. On the seventh of this month, about two in the afternoon of a very hot day for the season, and absolutely sunless and some what dark, my companion and dear friend Jennie Turmer was sitting by a window writing some account of her own experiences, when to rest her eyes she lookedout the window, and suddenly desired general Hanson who was at the table in the same room to observe an ernormous cloud which appeared to her of the very unusual shape and size of the rolled and simultaneously straightened out form of false Cirrus betokening the approach of a thunderstonn, except that it was of a brownish black color.

Before this he had just returned from a scouting tour with helf of his staff and a large body of cavarly, and had then come in to write a message to one of his higher staff officers. He herediately arose looked out the window, and then went up on the roof of the building whre he could more distinctly observe this very uncommon appearance.

At first he thought it was some great volcanic eruption of unusual extension. Ad too it was not at that great distance discernible from what line of low forested hills the ernormous cloud issued, but it was found to be asc n ascending from the lower extremities of the Bombon or Bundon Hills. I cannot give a more exact description of the figure of the cloud which we curselves saw simultaneously than by comparing it to the huge rolls seen by or in hig storm clouds on a summer day which extended itself at the top into a sort of long heavy bridge, p occassioned, I imgine either by the sudden gusts of wind that stretched it out at sucha lofty height, or the cloud itself being pressed into that formation by its own immensity, and expanding in this manner, it appeared sometimes bright below as if pierce by a strange ruddy light that seemed to denosup and down, and sometimes fuller and darker.

At first not one of us had the idea of a forest fire in our heads despite our experience in a small branch of it during the morning of the battles conclusion. Nevertheless whatever we believed it was at first, the extraordinary phenomenea excited the curiousity of us all and we decided to take a nearer view of it, for it continued to grow bigger and bigger and seemed to come slightly nearer.

At our advise general Hanson ordered a strong body of cavarly to accompany us. We gave Jonnio Turner the liberty if she thought proper to attend us. She mather however was nervous and afraid about that cloud, and declared she would rather continue her writings, for she said, we had given her the writings to do and she didn't want to put it off too long. But s we saw she did look a occassionally at the cloud before we left as if she was sort of apprehensive and worried. As general Hanson and us got onto our horses in front of the house, and waited for the body of the cavarly, that was to accompany us,,, s message rode up hastily with disptohes, and recleved word that all the people of the smaller towns west and south of Lebanon were terrified at theirminent e per if from the clouds foreboding apparance, and the message entra entrested his aid in this extremity. He got on the house top alone this time again while waiting for the cavarly, and looked steadily and long at the scene with his powerful field glassos. When he came back to us he himselflooked the same as Jennio Turner dide

"What is the cloud?"Violet usked. "A big forest fite is heading tward those towns"he answered. He accordingly changed his first design, and general, what he began with a curiousity he decided to do now with a horoical turn of mind and ordered quite a strong force of the fleetest horsemen to accompany him. He ordered a squadron of 10:000 to 10,000 men forward, and with us went himself at the head, ,, with the intention of not only assisting the people of those torns, but to give help to forest rangers that might be in the neighborhood for the population was quick thick in that region. Watons with blazing munitions were sont forward, and a lot of men with saws, exes, and other meuns for breaching in front of a forest fire. I was somewhat a doubting "Thomas" and so were my sisters, for if a forest fire was as immense as that cloud seemed to tell not even a big rain would stop its progress for us ...: ?? When reaching a town fromwhith the pipulation population were fleeing in the utmost terror he urged the troopers on tward the point of danger, and with so much calmness and presence of mind, as to be able to direct them tward Labanon, and to mke and dictate his observations upon the motion and figure of the dreadful scene. We were so migh close to one of those distant hills as horses can go fast that the smoke fog borne tward us on a southeasterly wind grew thicker and thicker the nearer we approach ed, and we were so in danger of gettingourselves lost in that stinking fog which hid all the scene properly, he stopped all of us to consider whether he and us should turn back again to which his retainer advised him-However we ourselves were against turning back, when believing the conflagration was quite a long distance off. We believe that Fortune and Honor favors the brave and we decided to get to one of the threatened towns. We heard from telographic report that most of the population had already started away, for though no one at that time were in any actual danger, yet being within view of it, and indeed extremely near if the conflagration c should certainly be approaching that direction, they were all determined to loave while there was yet time, and before the forest fire "hurricane" arose against them. We reached the town of Glendale and found the population there though they remained in the greatest consternation. His cavarly encouraged and exhorted them to keep up their spirits. but to also make preparation for flight tward Lebanon, and the more to dissp dissipate their fears he ordered with an air of unconcorn the cavarly to help the townsfolk get their belongings on their carts and wagons and to loose no time.

In the meantime we observed, the conflagration flamingout in several places with much serious violence and fury, with the darkness of night coming on so early that afternoon contributin g to render the dreadful red glare still more visible and dreadful. General Hanson in order to soothe the apprehensions of the people and to assure them it was only the burning of the forests far away, he greatly sided to prevent a panic, and evidently succeeded in getting most of the people started on the way with most of their belongings in theirpossession and hardly nothin g of valuable sorts left behind. Then while we had them all on the way and the cavarly soldiers directing them I and my sisters, and general Hanson consulted together whether it would be most prudent to trust to the ravines or to fly with the population to the open fields as to find our way back to Lebanon in such intense darkness seemed absolutely out of the question. In this distress, we resolved for the open fields as the less dangerous situation a resolution which the population were hurred into t it by their fears, y the general and the rest of us believing we were not in the path of the fire storm embraced upon cool and deliberate consideration.

We all went forth then having wet pillows tied upon their heads with roper, as this was our whole defense against the storm of heat that beset us on all sides. I should not wonder if it was not half darkness thoughout the country everywhere else but here indeed there was a much deeper darkness provailing than in the most obscure night we have ever seen, or ever caused by those Typhoon storms we have seen and experienced which however in some degree was discipated by the glarm of the distant fire, and by torches, and other lights of various sorts.

We all thought it much safer to go down d further and find our waysto the Vantura River to observe if we might saftly put out down the river and reach Lebenon by that rout. During all this time we had left u our friend Jennie Turmer at the city. But this has no connection with what we had been observing.

I know this letter which in compliance with your request has now it seems reject your curiousity to know what terrors and dangers attended us all, while we went down the river tward Lebenon. Well though our shocked and terrified souls recoils, and even rehels, my writings shell to it you all::

We started down the stream (should acress to think of what happens) and the cavarly persued their way along the shore as scouts. We thought therefore it was secure and therefore we landed in a little clearing, ate a small support, and frostence retired for the night leaving guards on duty to warn us if anything out of the ordinary happened.

There had been for many days before some warnings of the progress the unusual conflagration was taking northwestward, which the less surprised us as they are extremely frequent reports, but the noise of wind was so particularly violent that night, that they not only swayed the trees as if one of those so called "Typhoons" was coming on, but seemedindeed to threaten total destruction. It was the approach of the Fire Hurricane. My sister Jennie flow to me and my sisters where she found me rising on the purpose of awakening them and the rest. We all remained awake now and on guard. At this time I kn ow not whether I should call my behavior in this dengerous juncture courage or rash ness, but I took up my Dairy, and amused myself with by the help of my flashlight writing the accounts of our experiences in this day and night, and even making extracts from other experiences as if all about me and my sisters, and all the rest had been in full security. While we were in thisposture, w one of the cavarly officers joined us. and observing me sitting with my sisters with a dairy in my hand and writing in it, greatly condemned my calmness at the same time that he reproved us all for our careless security. Nevertheless telling him to mind his own affairs I still went on with my dairy. Though it was now no doubt the approach of morning if we remember any more mornings here since darkness sterted from so much macks so many weeks ago, the light was exceedingly faint and languid, the trees all around use oaned, screemed and rosered and twisted and writhed before the fierce glas of hot winds, and though we stood upon open ground, there was no remaining there now without certain and great danger as the wind had increased in force, n and smoke became heavy and smothering, and so we resolved toquit the territory. The population which fled from the towns followed us in the utmost consternation and as to a mind distracted with terror every suggestion is deed seemed more prudent than its own pressed in great crowds about usi in our way through the clearing tward the river and the bridge acrosss it.

We fortunately entered a very hune clearing when we got across but being got to a conviencient distance from the other clearing we for a moment stood still besides our horses which treme trembled in fright in the mist of a most dangerous and dreadful scene while we were pelted by broken branches twigs, and bunches of leaves torn from the trees by the terrific windstorms Far to our rear what astunished us a great long well of the queerest colored smoke seemed to roll back upon itself, and to be driven high above into the heavens into the most groteque shapes. In another direction a black andmost dreadful cloud, exceedingly large bursting seemingly with an ignmeous serpentinelike vapor darted out a long train a fire, v resembling sheets of red lightning, but much m larher and which rolled queerly and with the clouds of smoke.

Upon this the cavarly officer whom I have mentioned addressed himself to me and my sistors with great warmpth and earnestness" If every on e else of the population of these towns are safe by now said he they certainly wish you Princesses to be sotoo, but if every one have perished it is the desire of every one that you might survive them, why therefore do you delay your escape back to Lebanon anylonger. "

THE PARTY

However not only could we refuse even then to think ofour own safty even though we would be uncertain as to the safty of the rest, but we feltpositively sure that no mater how threatening it was, the con flagration was not coming our way. Hereupon disapointed the cavarly officer left us. Soon afterwards the great cloud of macke now towering far overhead seemed to descend slowly and in rolls and cover the whole landscape. General Hanson felt sure the fire was moving off in another direction and atrongly conjured me to climb a tree and see which way the flames was advancing, but not knowing the consequences I did not desire to do this and sent a soldier who knew how to climb a tree to do it for us. Finally we started moving onward, and taking my youngest sister by the hand I led her on, she complied with great reluctance and not without may reproaches to herself for retarding our flight. Some ashes no doubt horne by the strong winds from the burning forests began to fell upon us though in no great quenity. I turned my head and observed behind us in the sky a thick heavy smoke which came rollingupward like a huge thunderhead and spreading over all of the sky. I proposed while we had yet any small ammount of lightto turn coutionaly out of theybigh roads lest we should be accidentally presend to death in the dark, by the crowd of refugees that followed us. We had however scarcely stapped out of the pathway when sudden darkness overspread us, not like that of an approaching Typhoon or when there is no moon at night but of a closet when it is all shut up and all the lights are put out. Then we were startled almost out ofour wits by the shrieks of woman, and screams of frightfened children, ad the cries of many man, some calling for their very children others for their parents, others for their relatives, husbands or wives and only distinguishing each other by their voices one lanenting the fate befalling the country, another that of his family, some wish ing to die to getout of the drendful scene and to heaven, some lifting their hands to God in proper but greater parts fearing that the lat last eternal night had come, which was to destroy the world. Among them were some sho augmented the real terrors by imagin ary once and made the frightened multidues believe that even Lebanon was

At length an unusally strong glimmering row of lights appeared and we observe a long wave of fire going tward the north to our right. However the fire raged on at a great distance; on us, but not withstanding the glare we were still immersed in thick darkness our salvos.

I and my sistors and even general Hanson his self might boast that during all this scene of horror not a sigh or expression of fear ever escaped from us had not my support been founds! in that miserable though strong consolationthat all of Calverinia seemed to be involved in the same calamity eastward, and that we could have been imaging we were to be perishing with the word world itself. At last this dreadful darkness was slowly clearing by degrees, and soon it became twilight but no sun appeared, the daylight was only faint, as well night time is coming on. We had a desperate ride and tramp before we with as many of the refugees aspossible could make our way to the city of Lebanon, where when we reached it we refreshedourselves as well as we o could and yet we passed an anxious night between hope and fear for the forest fire horror still continued northeast of us while several greatly excited people in the city ran up and down heightening their own and their friends calamities by terrible and no account predictions. However we and the general notwithstanding the danger we had passed, and that which still threatened threatened uw should the direction of the wind change from southwest to northeast had no thoughts of leaving the city till we should recieved some account of the fires. And now if you desire to read this narrative without any view of inserting it into your history of the wars progress of which it is by no means worthy you may do so, but you must impute it to your own request too general if it even shall not deserve the trouble of a letter.

General Hanson took a drink of cold water and then threw hims if down upon a hed for the purpose to since sleep for the hot night.

As soon as it was light again, which was not much either the third day after this melancholy hotdent, the forests were stillall amoke as if the whole country side was in frightful eruption but what made us a little light was that the wind had turned west. But this has no connection with how far the fire progresses after this as your inquiry went nefurther than concerning whether Lebanon escaped or not, with that therefore we or I will put our end to the long letter. Sufer me only to add that I have faithfully related to you what I and my sisters and general Hanson and all who followed him were eye witnesses of, or recleved immediately after the conflagration approached so near Lebaon, and before there was any three to vary the truth. You nevertheless will choose out of this long letter such circumstances as shall becost suitable to your purpose, for there some to be a great difference between what is proper for letters, and histories.

YOUR FRIENDS . VIOLET. AND HER SISTERS.

TARRWELL."

In this account of this letter (beter) which was written by Violet and her misters we therefore of the readers can surely recognize;, the continula progress of this forest fire horror since it started in 1912, the agitated winds produced by the great conflagrations, the flames and smokes making scenes as if there were a million volcanic eruptions going on simultaneously, probably attended by many other unusual phenomen and other terrors . But it seems likely that the moe memory of the Vivian Girl Princesses, or rather the information communicated to general Aronburg by them regarding the closing scene of their experiences was not all together put in to the letter as they had had not time to write more. They did not state of the rocks of mountain alopes that ran down like lava because of the heat of the flames, and of the great explosions that were produced. All those who were there observed phenomena which required the belief that the worlds end was approaching, but there is no mode of proving whether Lebanon city and the forests in its territory were to be entirely safe in the future or not. A change of wind alone would decide the matter .. . ? .

The story h in the letter told by the Princess Joice Vivian and signed by her abors and Jennie Turmer was the only warning upon which general Aronburg could rely upon General Aronburg once said that during the progress of a fire, the smoke somethies assumed the format ion of a multitude of huge men and animals, and sometimes of those of weirdly shaped fishes, children, boys and girls, sometimes in the sky sometimes below the horizon, while a great hissing sound was heard as if a "take Micha Michigan size of grease and oil was burning atone time. How terrible indeed must have been the impression upon the minds of those who might have witnessed sohs great forest fire frommer off. Scenes worse than the story of the Last days of "Pompeii were observed and the scene should be a popul r popular synonym for the infernal regions, "

THE DESCRIPTION OF THE AWEUL FOREST FIRE IN THE MEANTIME, AS IT WAS HEADING TWARD LEBANON, AND TO THE DAMMASUREABLE FURY IT GREW, (NOT 57,40)

As it consists of the probable main events of the wars devastations is of sepecial especial interest as being the main continual disaster of the war that devastated so much country throughout the easternportiond portions of Calverinia---all the other smaller forest fires being in other localities--and for the maf femous see of ashes am ouldering and being left smoking like so manyin fernoss adt after the passage of the main fires-Before this it had been reported that the great forest fires had been slightly checked in its course, but since then it has frequently shown that the fires had only grown worse and was giving a more vigorously deplay of its advanci advance.

Dring the time of the battle of Evangeline St Claire succeeding the destructive events described progresses of the awful conflagration were of occassional countances, though of no great magnitude despite the fury of the conflagration from the terrific fight it recleved fromso south of Trinoque looked as if it was vome voniting fire and smoke. The fire was striking tward that hill. It was in this territory that the inhabitants men and women and effer children even wentout to combat the conflagration by felling trees, digging trendies, and smothering ground fires produced by the heat even from that far distance off-Their desperate work was however a success, they didn't check the progress of the fds, but caused it to cherge its course, and the city was saved. It is a note worthy thing that since this time there was no more threat of the flames from that duarter.

But then Evangeline St Claire was in danger. The first recognized appearance of the conflagration was when Manleys army was routed by it as mentioned in previous past chapters. This conflagration was added by five other conflagrations, none of them however of great energy for a time but they were beyond control just the same. It then rained and smoke covered the scene as if all that country had become a vast crater voneting smoke high enough seemingly with the purpose "To blow smoke into the moons (see This was followed through some tinknown cause by an explosion of terrible violence. Almost in a moment the green mangle of woodland and shrubbery in that district was torn away by what turned out to be a blast of abandoned munitions left by the enemy on retreat, and death and destruction left where safty had seemed assured. The fire branches off into seven district conflagrations because of this explosion, and swept rapidly onward leaving a sea of macking ashes of and of saculdering forest ruin along their paths. T.o Two towns were more or less overwholmed by the molten rocks r produced by the heat and which went down a hillside. Grant torrants of water also poured out from some constructed dam whose walls were undermined by the shock of the explosion adding to the work of destruction and not heading tward where the fires were. It was estimated that eighteen thousand inhabitants of dur good size towns were killed.

Indeed what made the horror all the greater was a frightful eror in judgement, similiar to that of the Governor of Martin que at St Pierre. The Mayor of the town of Sandy Ann had refuse to believe that the disaster was heading twend the town and prevented the people from making their escape untill it was almost too late. Not untill the conflagration was actually a mile away was the order for depart are given. Before the order could be acted upon a terrific towent of water posted into the accorded streets from the bursted receivour and overwhelmed the greater majority of the inhabitants inhabitants.

The water in the flood was not deep oncupit to have drowned very many persons, but the temperature of the water was to the scalabing point, and many were partialed to death. In the violent peroxycen of the explosion of munitions set off by the flames the whole top of the hill was said to have been blown away.

The fde then was not far from the Ava Maria Heights but now burning forward more slowly and casting up still more immense masses of smoke and at night the red glare could be seen and would grow stronger every now and then on the cloudly columns which hung over the conflagrate conflagration and be easily seen five hundredmiles away.

The popo population of the town of Handyknol flocked out to fight the flames reaching the forested portions of Uapri Quarry and Ravine Clan They overcame a smallconflagration in advance of the minone which leaped a breach formd by the rangers, but a portion of it crossed Hedda Creek and started to run up a small portion of the Ara M aria slopes. The fire was fought at that angle by means of trying to divert the codes of a mountain river upon it, but finally the flames

394 grew to with a measure that they were were said to have lempedone thousand feet and caught the forests shead as fast as straw would ignite. The progress of the fire ceased in the location of the river which was too wide for the flames to cross, but at eight as on that day on the 19th it burned through at a different place and the flumes then gained more headway and on this occassion that west phantom of smoke extendies extended its swful menancin g shdow over Evangeline St Clairs at a distance of still 150 miles from the city. One of the Rangers observed the progress of the fire twent the Murth Bend of the Evangeline St Claire River and believed the atream here was too wide for the conflagration to cross-while ordined in viewing this wall of leaping fire rolling as if the flames were smake clouds, the observing ranger heard a violent noise as flames make when catching a great mass of trees at one time, saw a whole wall of trees turn into a mass of fire at a distance of a quarter of a mile in a new direction right acrosss the river, and them like a hurricane of fire roar on tward him. Dense clouds of the blackest make darkened the sir, loud thunders came from burning trees as they fall by scores and as it walled tward him at a rush he being on horseback took to precipitate flight. The heat was parching and made his clothes smoke. He rode scross the stream in order to make himself all wet wa which

He rode across the strend in order to make himself all wet we which was his only safty. He escaped and his account is no doubt much too lively and instructive for his own words to be omitted.

"He said to general Hanson who had been his resculer;
"I was making my observations so as to fight a spot best suitable get my men to breach the conflagration, when on a sudden about eight colock, I heard a violent hissing and shapping sound from a new direction, and at a sport of the forest on the opposite sits of the main conflagration and not far from the spot where I stood perhaps two miles, I saw the forests burst into flame, and with much noting, and the flames leaped many feet high, and then it like a rolling up wall rolled directly tword meating in the sea of black clouds of smoke caused aboost a total darkness, the falling of trees made noise like thunder, and the smell of the burning pine bread mic very ffensive and stifling My assistant and guide, became alarmed and baned lately urged his horse into flight, and I must confess that I myself was not at my cases I followed as close as my chorse could rin, and we galloped for manymiles without stopping, and I was apprehensive the fire might either overtake us or out offour retreat, would it would easily have one had there been any wind at the thus. I also feared that the heat of the flames would detatched some of the rocks from the large of the flames would detatched some of water upon us, braides the burning embers being blown tward us by the strong breazes and falling upon us like snowflaj snowflakes were of such a sie as to cause a disagreeable somention in the part upon which they fell-after havingoutdistanced the fire, and after having given our jaded horses time to regain their breath I thought itmost prudent to leave the territory and return to the town, where I found the population in great clarm at the centifical progress of the fire-About one colock that afternoon another branch of the forest fire burned its way through a thick heavy timber forest whre trens were too close together to admit of anyl ight in the summer time, so that the conflagration was soon as great on this side of the river, as on the other. I observed on my way to warn Evangeline St Claire city of the danger, which was less than two hours after I had escaped the fite that persad me persued me, that the conflagration had already covered over the niles of the very forested road through which we had traveled in our flight showing how fast the flames were pro gressing. This wave of fire was more than two miles in brendth and how extended it was I couldn't tell. Resides mysterious explosions which were frequent, there was a continued strange hissing and rumbling noise -- supposed to arise from the actions of the overheated atmosphere nodoubt. The whole neighborhood was suffering dreadfully from the over heated atmosphere, and the cites of Trinoque and Evangeline 8t Cl. ir., and even Ophelia were in the extremity of minim, the churches were filled to overflowing, the streets were unusually thronged with processions of Saints, and of the Blessed Eachurst and of our Blessed Mother, and all sorts of various Geremonies were being performed in asking God to quell the progress and fory of the dreadful conflagration. They feared more the "Fire Hurricano."

During that night the occasion being critical and the aly seeming to be after itself, a hor horde of Glandelinian prisoners held in attempt guarded public houses attempted to escape from sheer fright, and a mob of people finally set fire to the wooden apareture of the entrance of the Cardinal Archbishop because he was ac efraid or I refused to bringout the Holics of Our Blossed Lords Crucifix. Smoke of great abundance come into the city of Runnicline 85 clairs sometimes like a fog. In the midst of these unaccountable he rors the mot became very tumultious and imaptient, and finally by force obliged the Cardinal to bring out the relics of the Crucifix, at the extremity of Evangeline St Claire in a Religious Profession of great Sciennity, and it is well attested here, that a strong northwesterly while become to blow, and grew to a flerde strong couling gale, that the progress of the conflagration on censed in that direction the moment the relies were said to have been brought in sight of the fismes. The fire was said to have changed its comes of progress about that time after having threstened the city for abut six hours. The city was cle ared of smoke but for a time the danger came to an end. Ceneral Hanson Vivian also witnessed this confingration and its prograss. He wrote to General Concentinian Arothurg at the time of the whole scene.

To Hansons eye sight it seemed to be a wave of fire ascending two miles high, while the nky was heavy with socke and flames. He us claimed it was the more formed able and stubborn conflagrations he had ever seemelt was he some respects unlike many others he had narrow escapes from in the past and being some what peculiar as to the spot of its arval, the temperature the flames dough at a great disatance away from the conflagration, and the course of the sen of fire-He observed the characters to phenomena with the eye of actions and his account abroled many interesting atories of it afterwards. Cental General Hanson remarked certain chances in the character of the motions of the progressing conflagration during this sk or seven hours threatening denger to Evangaline & Club e, which had him to some particular conjecture of the true cause. The fee at the time of the isginning to threaten the city of Evengeline St Cimirs (I declars) caused great construction throughout the whole territoryshe by the proposes of the veher bide confiagration as it went north of Evengeline St Cimirs the weather west of the blaze was trangul with forest fire humerhanes raging and det the fire zone. And ever since any of these big fires started over the whole country hung the thick deak smake cloud (proud) and at a great distance seemd to heighted up into a file kering our oral arch by the glars of the flames by by blow the cloudes The very waters of the eastern sace for as they were seemed at times to reflect the glars glars. Where to a town south of Thinughe in flames and clouds of black scake with fulling houses presented a dark and tragicial foreground heightened by the row of the conflagration and the greens and screens and learn tations of the whole popul ation. The heavy clouds of smoke borne over the whole country gathered in the early morning into a mighty shdow as for north or Abbhanate and the neigh boring seas and over the seas the sun rose pate and obscure, and a long dim twilight continued boreign. Such were the stronge incomence even tobthe states of Abbhanania. They were matched by other others on the eastern aspect, not visible at Abbhanania, except by the reflection of their light in the atmosphere even at such a long distance. The seas of fluese or thisportion moved northeantward, and the extreme length of this great forest fire was not less then three hundred shits miles. The progress of the western breach of the fire seased to go northward on the twenty five of August and turned to go straight northward, and he heat of so much fluess findly produced heavy or ine but these didn't quench the fluese and only and quadrupled the amount of an smake and forest fire gases.

Among the motable things also which attended the configuration that struck Trinoque at last it was recorded that metallic and all other substance exposed to the flames were variously affecteds Hiverware in houses were selled glass become porcelain, from swelled to four thins its volume and lost its texture. Frash was decomposed, and its constituent copper crystallized in cubic and orthhedral forms aggregated in the most broat life, branches. Fine was turned to El blands. Far from the configuration the Evangeline St dinkre River was found in a boiling state with myriads of cooked fishes floating on its surface, and so beat could go on the water on account of the melting of the pitch on their bottoms. The heat of the flames were sait to have generated heavy rains, and large tracts of country were deluged with continual rainstorms with thunder and I ighthing Most of the rains felloutside of the fire ever, but where they did fall in the burning country they made terrible make and did not quence the fire.

Immones injury was done to rich territories of trees by the fluses and by hurriesness produced by the fluses, and the towns of Summus Ottajano, and Rosco were deluged by he buy rains produced by the heat which swept blong cinders, broke up the roads and bridges and over turned trees and boxes for more than fifteen days. The darkness produced by the a o smoke when the fittee were turned into modeling inferno smudges by the rain was an interne as Prebus for hundreds of miles over the adultry side.

Hanson himself ade made numperoximate calculation of the ermormous progress of the conflegration and states the results as equal to what of the burned area would cover a also ofone of the quarter sections of the whole inndeceme of forests throughout the whole nation. There were never in record anywhere in the whole world adone the history of the whole prostion in which forest fives ever made any much spread in any known country from Asset ion to Europe. The fife programmed on more slowly when panning the here there of Evangetine St Clairs and a portion of the forested region of Ava Haria and Tune heights were being on enveloped. A great band of for ant fire fighters suthered in its path to try and retord the blaze up the slopes, but a sudden explosion of somemutions laft openiannly by one of the fighters in the nath of the pl fire killedthirty five of the Rangers and wounded a hundr ed. The fire aproad on monttered upon the forests by the explosion which witnesses said throw rocks and burning trees to the height of four hundred feet, and the explondon had been noviolent th that fearing the Ava Moria heights had become a wilconound broken into an eruption the whole countryside fled pente stricken to Evangeline St Clairs and Maris Kormann cities. Everybody in the territory among the men concentrated their efforts against the advancing flames but it seemed of no avait.

with the wards suche frightful programs, it was seem strong indeed that so describes a selection of the still inhabitated. But so it is. Though Abbdeson, Le Poleme, and Min-Hollester Cities still lie under water, and many otherwhere described still in under water, and many otherwhere described still remain. It is thus that the right-out but bold Colvertain people still remain. It is thus that the right-out but bold Colvertain people in their espenses to suffer for the sake of Our Lord, and to defy the dreadful foe darse the most frightful partia and even venture into the most frightful and most threatening situations, seeking to do any thing at no matter wat the next tend difficulty to see the Glandelinian examine humbled before, the world. Despite all they go through and have went throughed danger and horror is soon forgotten,..., and so treatmining the activity of the Calverinians. The enemy fear the citizens of Calverinian wore then they dod the christian armiaes.

The Ava Maria Heights are the must formideble of the great Bomb Bondon Hills range and is a little over two to three thousand feet above the level of the sea. All portions except where the table of Evangeline St Clairs was fought is most des densely wooded. The forests are almost endless in this territory being mostly Turpentine pine but there are also the oak, chestwat and all other various sorts of trees. In this forest region are high grassy glades, fosst debris and leaf much many feet deep which afford rich fuel for the approaching flames. The great extent of these forests would soon exert a remark able influence on the forest fire in its general conglumeration, for once the blazes starts up the slepes in general the situation indeed for the whole country would be a very graveone. (Gerdous menance to the Calverinian country enth ely beyond measure).

.The destruction of towns because of this forest fire has been numerous, records of them extending back since the beginning of the conflagration, while so far, unrecorded ones doubtless took place also where but there is no trace because of the sea of make overspreading the whole country. After the beginning of October 1912 and more empointly later after the breaking forth of the battle at Cedernine, the fire burn ed in localities where country or forest villiages and towns were more further upart. There seemed to be a great phenomen in the character of the forest fires, for so often loud explesions followed the progress of the flames, and the macke appeared like ashes and sand and rook sebris making appearances of volcanic eruptions. The symptoms that warms of the near approach of these conflagrations are generally immense clouds of smoke rolling forward and the sight of flames that generally slarm the surrounding country as far away as one hundred miles, and so far these reging forest fires have given the whole burning territory the name of "Val Demone, as being the abode of the inferral regions and their pirits. The flowes incremed on the slopes of these hills, but just then apposing surrents of winds were by blowing acround the bild and were mufficiently powerful enough to retard the progress of the flowes, but the flowes though with an uncommon efforts managed to slowly progress forward just the same, and mavened swiftly through those portions of the forests where the counter currents of winds offered the least resistance with a grand and mont,, terrific effect, the rowing flowes reaching town incredible hoight, and the fire hurricones are apprending typited tree foliage and hurring embers in every direction.

This so far was becoming one of the most memorable progressive movements of the drendful conflagration. The main arm of the fire began to burn up the b forested slopes in a fashion as if the mountain had opened an arnormous figure and was armptio erupting there with a thougan times the violence of Kraketon, its length being fourty two miles, its average breadth mix miles, and the height of the flower seen five hundred mileaunknown. The heat it threw was farme and storms of sycloingi syslonis force orginated from it, and terrific rainstorms but far off from the territory of flomes. A torm burst on the sugadtofone of the imported hills but made no effect. The progressive of this frightful part of the conflagration was observed by mon of science from various christian countries. The account however from thich we select is that from Hannon vivian to manaror wivian by telegraphic mail. He said the fast sign of the approaching blaze that he noted though he was more than three hundred miles away was a bright light on the darknessed clouds of smoke in the sky far above at conflagrations he enideust have started on the slopes in a line with the main blaze and emitted wast columns of seething finness, noncomputed by mysterious explosions which could be heard fourty miles off-Tward the break of morning when there was then only the country of twillight with the sky black in the direction of the conflagration it appared as if a swarm of craters had opened on the hills and we were in full scuption.

He had wished to go mean enough to view the great fire and he therefore did so, though it took him four days journey on fast horses to come as ment as he daread as he candhad there he can the fluore from a great elevation he was on which fire presented a front as far extended as he could see more forward like an advancing any, and it burned tward a meant villings in a valley which was spendix destroyed.

From felres winds blowing and carrying mbers seven new fires broke out shead of the main, on and in three day sunited with it forming a greater conflagration than ever-All this time the errible fire con timuded to hend for the great Bondon hills and the Ava M aria heights destroying another little mountain villings. The original bigger blaze m seting with some sort of effective resistance somewhere divided into three new conflagrations one of which destroyed the villiage of San Sebustion, the second, Sumbream, and the third the forested budgers bordered farm lands about the town, and afterwards the villinge of Rotiono. Fourteen villinges were altogether destroyed befor his very eyes, and the fimmes literally rolled on tward Trinoque. At Septernia two miles from the city the flames were slightly cheen checked by a big break in the woods, and when the finness reached the enstern. outskirts of Trinoque it accumulated without progression into one mountain of rising searing flames with a rour like artilary, and overwhelmed a f part of the city into total destruction. And her portion of the same wall of flames struck, the city on the southwest. The next three hous the rowning flames reached the Evangeline St Claire River where it was broad but it crossed in: a roaring inferno of flowe. Th conflagration had moved at the rate of fourty miles in a day.

On reaching the atreem the fire crossed and dissed itup in a long wall of fire, and from the heat the water, of course soon lengan to boil violent and huge clouds of smalls streamonrous adding to the thrill of the scene.

Twent the end of the day the flower that had been advancing on the west side of Trinoque again advanced forward and branched of into the city after partia partially destroying the Beneditine Mon met ery of St Agness Attempts were made to form high bremstworks to arrest the progress of the complainables but to no avail. Water

An attempt of enother kind was made by the head worest Rangers who took up five hundred and fifty men with him having previously provided themwith skins for protection against the fierce heat felt at own two miles money to singe you and with allsorts of weepons to try and form a strong wide breach in the path of the "Rod Plague". The men finally managed to check the conflagration in their own direction but a section of the conflagration besed lately turned its course and rushed in the direction of Evangeline St Clairs, where upon fifty thousand men of that town almosed for its selfy took up tools and wayeen and helped fight the fire in that direction so desporately that again it changed its directions::..., where the fde had burned over for in its southern rear it had been found three months afterwards that the ground remained red hot tomenth its surface and great quia quantities of stream escaped after a rais-knewplos or explosion over admention plat of Trinoque occurred and the debris and rocks and earth materials burled up by the blacks during this explosion in the city were of concliderable manifule, and one large rock was about "fifty fact in sixe and thrown a will from the council that and it penatrated the street into which it full to a depth of thirty feat. The small branch of fire that threatened Roma are at length of these mails branch of fire that threatened Roma are at length of these mails of the distriction and through miles, m so that in a short time to proposeding it covered fourty square miles of forests. Among the williages turned by this great branch of the fire was Mompilibri. It is not by fire and smoke clone that the forest fires were rayaging the hills, and plains, and the vallies. The forest fire in traveling up the forested slope of Mt Catherine caused a great deluge of water. This mountain is 19,000 feet high above its base not counting sea level and was considered a extinct volcano. Half way up to the slow line this hig volume on as heavily thehered. On the 2th of September two waves of the forest fires burning their way up the slopes grew to an ernormous perpections and threw up the alopes of the snow covered mountain so much heat that the anow was melted in a hurry. The consequence was therefore that a great borrent of water soon rushed down the sides of the mountain carrying with it vast quantities of sand, stones, forest trees, volcante cinders, and blocks of lave with which it overspread the the flanks of the mountain and the plains beneath in a frightful deluge worse than even the bursting of the biggest dam in the whole world, and the floods devastated everything in its course adding to the terrors of the approaching conflagration. Also the water was so scalding but that it gave forth great clouds of steam in its approach. The whole of water was estimated at II, 16,000,000 cobin foot to founding three channels six miles broad and in some places thirty four to fifty feet deep and flowing at the rate rate of twomiles a minute at its fastest. To deed all the winters snow on the top of so great a Calvertaina mountain as Mt Bt Catherine could not have caused such a flood, and it was considered that from the fierce heats of the raging confingrations racing up the slopes that very flame smust have reached up somewhere and even malted old vers of the shich had been preservedunder overlags of volcanic dust. Where They swalt however these floods did out great hig gaps in the forest fires by tearing the trees down like the termedo but most of the trees carried along with the trees were still burning and except in their path the floods did not hardly retard the progress of the fire in the mountains district at all. The floods however breached them so that the fires had to burn in three different directions. The result of the flood to the fire presented some strange pecularities. We esrest the point whence the biggest forest fire ascended and spread, the cutting apart of the conflagration caused three large now ones to form and ill uminated the night sky so that it was seen afar off. Shortly afterwards, there began a little further on the flank of the mountain another conflagration fromwhich a sim similar result took pl ce and still further up there soon appear ed a fifth, which there burned a rouring cloud of fire which a rapidly spread itself over miles andmiles of forest trees. During the first twent twenty four home of its progress the fire traveled nearly fourty five miles, when it reached a great accession or temporary checks

The three original fires soon again become united introne large conflagration conflagration, from which as from the other two mout two conflagrations above their there poured upward a vastly augmented wall of flame enveloping as it seemed all t of that portion of the mountain. It was then that the flood reality occurred.....

Furing the progress of the flood it directed its certee art-1 a cortain c section of the mountain where it opens into a large ravine of some sort miles long and where there is a deep state perpendicular precipies artived at this point the torrent of water leaped over the precipies in a vase v cascade, and with a loud thundering noise, and to make such noise as to awaken an alarm that the mountain had broken into an eruption at this very place and in the wooded regions

The progress of the forest fire tward the Bengall State Forests were first witnessed by a party of English Tourists, who were ascend ing a high hillwith the purpose to get a view of the destroyed sections that had been devestated by the Abbieunn Explosions. As they got up half way to the top of the hill they not lead the akt origh ad was enveloped with a heavy smoky black cloud as if a great storm was approaching, though weeks before they had noticed there had been ni not even the slightest summount of sunshing, and the weather nevertheless was tereibly hot and what they thought at times strangely forgy. As they observed this strange phenomena a vo wiel at wielent win datoms arose, which forced them to sheltere thomselves beneath some masses of great rocks to avoid the flying atoms and other debris. When the mysterious storm subsided they returned to their destination furtum ately without having been injured. In the course of the ever becreasing darkness a great glare was observed by them in the direct cast, and by a long wave of deep white hot coloring of a glara they at first mistook it for a great molton in a flow going down a far distant hillside. They were astonished. They of expected to one "it" flow down twend the base of the hill, but the upper part of the hill though forested was still in darkness. They decovered the far distant glars to moveupard instead of downward. At that distance it seemed to move upward slowly at apparently a smalls pace, and they again took the chances to go up anothe another hill to observe the phenomena some of east with the te state ". (lasees.

At first even then the slope of the hill did appear to be enveloped by a molten lake but they heard no loud explosions. The glare moved stillupword and tword the flank simultaneously and continued to increase in size and to form into the forests of the huge valley beneath. It seemed to have many forms of glars rixingspward at at last they discovered 10 was fire. This scene was to them one of the grandest of all scenes of raging forest fires. Norm than 2,000,000,000 acres were hurning within their view at one time. Their attention and arrested indeed by the strong phonocon present even though to their idea it was more than a hundred miles away. They believed the total height of the flames was one handbhatthousendest one thousand feet, and the rear portions of the conflagration was aboutd two thirds of that unusual height. They declared it was heing the worst of wore forest fives even raging in the world. They lieved the fires may have been r beginning before September 1912, that unless real country wide resistance is given the conflagration it would never cease, although it may vary in intensity from time to time. It was observed too that the violence of the progress of the forest fires had a contain dependance on the weather --- being almostmost intense when the barometer islowest. They viewed the conflagration for a long time from theirposition so high being able to look at it down from above. Kven when viewed in that manner the blaze presented to them a very striking appearance, and the flames seemed to be constantly risin g and falling at intervals. Sometimes the rising clouds were of various colors and rose with a decrepitating noise tossing as it seemed high into the air clouds of sparks. They could also hear a loud crackling

There has been in other chapters previous in the various volumes been described the terrible work of the Abbisann disaster of the past few months, and of the great ravages of the unusually continuous forest fires, from the early part of the year of 1912 down to the present in the story up to the month of October 1913.Battles, lightn ing, and the enemy is blaned for the conflegration, and onlyone is guilty of the cause for the main thing in this story. The forest fires are all incendary except one fire, and that fire doesn't exist.

The forest fires as discovered by the spying efforts of g Violet and her sisters were not originated either by any of the Claidelinian generals. They egnited them of course but the whole horror was planned without exception by only the high members of the Glanddinian Kingdom, though the King dis didn't seem to have a hand in the council as he was absent at the time. But whether he later approved of it or not, the story itself doesn't and will never say. But nevertheless we'll make him take the blame ne just the same as he could have easily have frustrated the plans of his lower rulers.

The conflagration itself if it ever was a true one was the most frightful conflagration ever written in history or ever cocured or can cocur in reality. LLWW For over three months after this great cutbreak, the mations of the whole world had been one comparatively quiet on the subject rarely believing indeed that the forest fires did really exist, thinking that maybe perhaps the darkness of the skips over the whole of Galverinia as reported was because on ly of excessive cloudy weather, but it was not untill all the reports began to be verified by all foriegn correspondents and war awenger mon that ever everything began to come to a realization and therefor in this story all 5 Church Services in mornings and evenings, sandays or week days were appointly offered for the ending of the horror and the speedy demolition of the Glandelinian armine in Calverinia.

Tward Late September 1913 the great foest field becomes more threatening then ever, and a great wave of flame began to make its way up tward the forested regions of East Bongall Sin o.1t was in the addite of the first week first week of the month of September that these in Simulion in decations rose to the extremely dangerous point, the spread of the conflagration suddenly swelling from a river of flame to an errormous ocean of fire, pouring in a hellich flood of flames through the once besutiful forests, and meeting the other smaller conflagrations,s that had been burning a little in front of it-while this went on the weather itself remained very quiet there was not a breath of wind, and the huge clouds of smoke rose higher in the air, while from it a durkness soon to become terrible indeed indeed began to descend upon the sur rounding fields country and towns.

Dangerous as the great forest fire was orgin at any is at any time, the population of the threatened vinicity dered all the perils produced by it in their attempts to divort its dreadful course. The people were even ready to dare destruction for the hope of winning the fight against this over powering "Red Plague" of the forests. Yet all this very locality for hundreds of miles was now an immense field of terror and death. Onward tward vineyr vineyards and villiages in the huge clearings advancing the droutful conflagrations in over increasing vigor, but they advanced slowly however, and from their homes fled many thousands of the terror stricken women and children, frantic with horror and damay dismay, suffering terribly from the heat waves and the half smothering snoke. Indeed a great number ofpopulous villiages and forest towns were threatened by the lurid fire waves, the most endangered being the very city of El Verso which had recently been greatly devastated by the ; past rayaged floods. Tward this devoted city raced steadily the irrestible flood of roaring flowers. The soldiers of various standing armies, hundreds of foost rangers, and the men population of the city itself, and many other volunteers and even Glandelinian prisers had been heretal to the front and suight to divert its progress in that direction by digging a wide ditch, by making wide clearings across its course, and throwing up a high bank of earth and fighting most frantically brush and ground fires started by the flaren heat of the man conflagration, and even bursting the levees of streams toflood the territory but they worked in vain. Trees were blasted to earth, even the fire departments of the city tried their heat, but the demon of this flery destruction was not to be robbed of its prey. The wifre wave advanced like a most colosial wave of fire and keepi keeping stoudily on tward the fatal or ill fated town-Seeing that the Red Plague couldn't be stopped one thousand rangers worked like mad fiends to remove from their frest Cant all the high explosives n in time toavoid a dreadful explosion. The file came file came on with the roar of a volcanic eruption, the ditch was crossed in a sea of flame that leaped hundreds of feet high, the fire reared wickedly across the huge clearing now brought forth by a fierce gale of wind that carried burning embers far and wide, fires started even in forests ahead of the time, the first house a xo wooden cone convent was reached, and soon burst into flames despite the offerts of the fire fighters to stop it, the roaring fire crept on to the next houses in its way, the piles of still remaining wrockage of the late floud demolition was soon a mountain of fire, the town was soon all going on the fire sde, and only then did the despairing people desort their homes and flee for their lives carrying the little with them which they could snatch of their treasured possession, and to eatch trains going north which was their only hope of escape as the fire reaced onward thirty miles an hour.

General Hanson Vivian who was present at this scene, and whose army of soldiers not watching the movement of Gladelinian armies had joined desperately in the fight against the flames, thus described the flight of the terrified people to the Vivian Girl Princessesin a letter which run as p follows;

"Dear Vivian Girl Princesses;

The horrors of the disaster is well of note. I saw women and children and in ants whose very mothers carried them in their breasts or in their aprens fleeing in an endloss procession while the men folk were out desperately fighting to stem the rush of the Red Plague. Dogs too and cats were on the carts and vagons, and sometimes even chickens, tig tied together by the legs andpiles of mattresses and pillows and she shapeless bundles of clothes. Street cars were crummed full of people who even ree on their roofs, trains were crummed full of people who even ree on their roofs, trains were crowded and what was stranger still animals of the laurning forests had fled into the city deers, rathits, every animal including bears and even forests anakes all seeking an avenue of occupe and paying no more attention to the pnic stricken crowds of people as if they were not in existence.

All were white with terrors. Under the lurid glare I saw one old lady lying on her back in a wagen gheatly white, and if not deed already of feer and heat and suffocation from smoke and the theft ing of the windstorm certainly almost gone. We curselves could hardly breath, and the flames of the forests in fore the town went reached clear across the sky in terrific cheeted tongues sheering through the clouds of relling smoke making a strag strange rushing snapping andunu undulation so sound. It was on A sunday that this second timeill fated city of El Verso became a pre proy of the dreadful vi fire pestilence buring that night and following day the crisis seemed to have come. We wore in an forest Rangers Observatory on a mountain side. At midnight the situation seen from the observatory was terrible. The forces of many explosions no doubt made by rangers in their desperate fight tosave the town were ,e let loose and the wind rocked the charrentory that we could scarcely stand on the floor. The rearing of the fierce flames even though far away and passing us hermlessly bywas deafening there was varies of hissing sounds, great cruckling and snapping, the display of hurricanes of sparks and embers forme by the wind was terrifying, and constant claps of thunder followed the work of the fighters who were blasting to tear huge rifts in the forests to gap the fire. Shortly after three of oclock in the morning the fierce energy of the mighty fire culminated in that location. The whole city was on fire. The town had in its center a huge munition factory n and thus bust open with a shock like a tremendous carthquake, and with a deafening roar, and flamingdebris seemed to be murled half a mile into the air, while a dense mass of smoke seemed to be hurled three or four times this height.Rarely had a more terrible Monday been seen. It was as if the very demons of carth and air and flame were let loose w and were to destroy Our Lords very creationitself.

This frightfulprogress of the forest fire, was the wost of the dreadful display that I had witnessed, but I know the flames progressed further and further on elsewhre never diminishing in intensity. The smoke came in suffocating clouds and the scene resembled that of typhoons I've seen with you in other times."

Hanson vivian."

Of El Verso nothing was left but a few buildings which could not burn became they were fire proof but their shapes were disfigured by melting to some degree from the fierce heat. Another branch of the fire reached the outskirts of the town of Beppo Bosco, and a third stopped at St Anns Forest Cemetery and went in another directiom because of a gap there too large to leap. Those towns fo rtunstely escaped, but millions of acroes of forests in their neighborhood were destroyed by the see cloud of flame. The Turmer Railway lines was ruined and the railway station of Beppo Burned. Another eye witnessed told of wat he observed on that fatal Sunday and Mon day;; 2

"On the road near the Vantura section I met countless hundreds of families in flight, carying wht few possessions they had time to save from the towns. Indeed the scene of collasping wagons, fato fatigued horses and fainting wenen from the heat were frequently seen. When one reached the scene of the approaching wall of fire a most stupying su stupifying scene indeed presented itself. From point on a long forested low hill between the towns and smaller cities I saw four dreadful and wildy raging conflagrations, one of which was four miles wide and foatt over fourty miles long and it was m burning slowly and fiercely onward devouring vineyards and all trees and high grass in its path and sending up volumes of smoke en ough to put the worst active volcano to shame. I withnessed the destruction of a farm house surrounded by a fierce forest bluze. It was enveloped on three sides by the conflagration. The whole atmosphere far and wide seemed to be absolutely incandescent for an incredible distance and the heat was terrific. Indeed the whole seen was wreathed in the biggest flames ever imagined and a perpetual roar and snapping and terrible hissing sound was heard Ever and anon the top of one forested hill was encircled with fire that denced in and out of the macke clouds as if there was a vivid eletric phene phenomena going on and so farce was the blaze rushing up its slops that it appeared like an uprush of liquid fire being all revealed in the most magnificent awfulness, with a wind beginning to ru rise the fires redoubled their onrush ad and women and children fled precipitately for any shelter they could find from the conflagration, while the men themselves were fighting as hard as they could to divert the course of the dreadful red plague. The flames had-crossed the Vantura road behind them and was rushing on at

The great loss of life was due however to the wast fury of the sudden rising of the fire hurricane which brought almost the same conditions as destroyed the city of St Pierre in Martinque island. The violence of the hot winds tore off the roos and buried the occupants within the ruins of their blazing homes. In all the neighboring towns buildings were destroyed in great numbers by the winds before the fire reached them an early estimate being that fully fifty five thousand bouses had been partly crushed or utterly destroyed before the con flagration struck the towns. On the Turmerann is side of Vantura Road ware the flames were at their worst all the towns and villiages were totally burned, and the city of The Turmeranni was left a smouldering blazing wreck. In the big city of Mildred Greenburg two hundred miks two hundred miles west of the conflagrations because of an east wind the smoke fog was so think thick that those who could afford it wore caps and goggles and gas masks, while the people generally sought to save their eyes and faces from the heat waves by the aid of "Haloween Masks and umbrellas. The drivers of strent cars and elevated roads still surviving the flood wrack were obliged also to wear masks of some transparent materials under the vizors of their caps. Though so far away the heat in the city was terrible. Tar melted on the roofs, people sweated as if all were under T r Turkish baths and the suffering was immense.

In the city of Evage Evangeline St Claire there were two special great disasters attended by serious loss of life because of the terrific winds then prevailing. On the ninth of September while a congrea congregation of two thousand or more packed the St Michales Cathedral in praying for the ending of the conflagration harror, the violence of the winds ripped the huge roof off from the building, and sent it sailing like a pivot into the air. The wroc wrenching was so violent that from the shock one of the walls crashed in and fell upon the worshippers below, and not one of them escaped alive. The only ones who escaped and yet were seriously injured were the priest and the five alter boys. The second disaster on the same day andone of the same character but far worse took place at the ofty of Ava Maria.

Just previous to it the whole population had been marching in marching in religious processions through the streets in the face of the fierce wind storms to render thanks to God and His Blessed Mother for the apparent cessation of the progressive forest fire in the direction of the town. Motley but picturesque processions were these indeed, headed by so many alter boys carrying candles, which burned simply in the full glare of distant fires, and hearing eloft images of Our Blessed Mother, of Our Lord, crucifixes or of saints clad in gorgeous robes of expensive blue purple or yellow satin. Their joy was suddenly changed by tidings of a frimtful disaster superintended or produced by the heat of the forest fire.

A full grown tornado of hot winds revolving in a unknown speed along in a terrific funnel cloud tore to pieces a good section of the town strewing the wreckage along the whole Vantura road, and more than three thousand people were kilds killed and ten thousand hur, hurt or burni buried beneath all the debris which began to catch free. This section of the town too had been crowded with refugees from the burning burning towns beyond all women and chiodre children. With scarcely a warning, the tornado struck, there came a frightful noise of wind, a still more frightful crash of torn and splintered buildings, and a dense cloud of dust and smoke covered the scene after its wild passage from out of which far and wide come heart rending screems of agony. The news set the people frantic with grief and indignation/. Screaming and praying in their intense excitement, they rushed for the stricken districts endeavoring with frantic haste and desperation to remove the heavy masses of wreckage from beneath which came the appealing calls for help many of the rescuers sobbing aloud as they worked. It required a large force of citizens and strong women to cary carry on more systematically the work of relief. Of the whole population in that section only twelve proved to be the only survivors all the rest were killed or so badly hurt they wouldn't live. Among these were many children. The Mayor of the town directed the work of rescue, while his wife and elder du daughters and son assisted in the care of the injured.

As the wife of the citys Mayor bont in the hospital to give a cooling drink to a badly burned little girl she suddenly felt a kiss upon her left hand. Looking down she say a woman kneeling at her feet, who grateful gratefully said"Your Excellency, the little dear is all I have. I am a window as my husband was killed at the battle at Cedernine. May God and His mlessed Mother roward you."

While this scene of unspeakable horror was taking place in Evange line St Claire and Ava Maria town, the fate of the villiags and towns grouped around the territory served as hopeless as ever. Early on the Noth of September the force and fury of the forest fires had diminished because of the desperate fight the conflagration recieved from so man men, but later the same day because of rising sasterly winds began to advance again, and the terrified inhabitants feared that a catastrphoe like that which all other towns had met was about to visit them. The forest fire which reached the St S Anna country Grave vards and diverted its comes because of resistance there by thousands of men turned in the direction of St Phillips town. A violent storm of wind accompanied its onward approach, and the towns of Santa Ann a, St Anns, and Glad Glady's Junction, and Clam Harbor and also Saria felt the force and heat of this wind which brought so much snoke that the people stuffed cotton in their window sahses to keep it out. A typical case was that of Glady's Jun otion. Torach for two days the lace had been deserted, a few ghor ghostly figures could be seen at intervals when the flames of the fires illuminated the scene wandering desolutely about, hungry and thirsty, their throats parched by smoke, dust and heated winds, yetunable to tear themselves away from the ruins of their late confortable homes. So deep was the smoke murk as far north as Calverine that railr railway travel was utter impossible.

A party of officials made a tour of in spection near Evangeline St Clairs by wagon visiting a number of the city, but were prevented by the state of the smouldering roads from reaching others. Ava Maria was cut off from all communication and tr v travel, and a heavy dark cloud of smoke followed the officials officials in their retreat. At Beppo Turner the smoke was an ocean of rolls. The smoke was carried over hundreds of miles of country in the most dense a mass in the sky and over landscapes, and nothing was visibe even tward Calverine but the smoke sea. Even as far as the city of Calverin e so far north the air was almost unbearable, the heat intense, and few could long bear the dangers and discomfort of the situation and an exodus of people started from that town to try and escape the awful smoke and heat. The greatest thickness of the smoke far cutside the far fire zone driven forth by the winds was encountered in the vinicity of Marie Osborne City. Here large countrysides was thickly fogged in, and everybody were being forced to wear gas masks. Soldiers had been sent there with military carts, carrying provisions and surgical appliances, with orders to lend their aid in the work of relief, but they found it impossible to mke their way through the dense smoke fog, and the tales of horror and heroism that they had to tell resembled those in the pe poems of Dantes Inferno.

Wear the town of Gross Greek which was burning, efforts were made to remove the children and women in covered wagons and box cars, but when these had gone a hundred feet, they could not get through the region north of Sun Beam Beam Sunbeam Junction because the fire was leaping acrosss that territory and coming tward them in the same fushion as violet, and her sisters had experienced during the battle of Lebanon. This caused a panic among the children especially, who exc expected to be overtaken by the frightful blaze and they fled in all directions in the darkness and blinding smoke. Scarchin g parties were immediately sent after them but in spite of continuous shouting and calling no trace was found of the littleones, and numbers of these children really perished having been overtaken by the disasted disaster they fled to avoid. Had they remained where they were they all would have escaped.

May of their charrt charred little bodies had been found buried in the ruins of the smudge of the fire swept forest, and the scenes when the little victims were recovered were often piteous and terrible. Thepositions of the half chared bodies showed that the little victims had died in flight while in a state of great terror, their little fea faces being convilsed with fear. One forest ranger rode his horse through a smudge fire collingout for the children but in vain-

Another rescuer was rewarded by his cries by hearing a mans reply from a half burned shanty in weak tones, and springing from his horse, he floundered through the still snoking ashes of the forest in his high boots to the smouldering walls of a big shanty from which the voice seemed to core. As he made his way through the soft sacking treacherous layer of forest debris which surrounded the destroyed habitation, and with difficulty worked his way tward the smoking build ing the soldier shouted words of encouragement, and climbing over a heap of slightly smoking charred ruins, and braving a toppling wall still ablaze entered the building. In the ruins he b found the bodies of three charred little girls and one boy. Near them was a dead woman and a man harely alive, whoyby almost super human efforts for hours had succeeded in from Lig himself from a mass of fortunately unburned debris which had fallen upon ber him. The soldier picked the man up in his arms and carried him to aplace of safty. It was found that both his legs were broken, and that he had been badly crushed about the body and slightly burned about the face and the hands and feet.

Some extroaordinary escapes from death and the forest fire took place. A man his wife, and his family of six children all goils were rescued after having been lost in a ravine and surrounded by the raging hell for fifty six hours. They were terribly exhausted, almost dead from heat and suffocation, and were reduced almost to skeletons. A little riverlet in the center of the ravine was the only means that had enable enabled them to endure without perishing so long-General Charles Brown one of the greatest and best abled bodied christien generals of h the army and nation, who happened to be on a furlough at the time of the outbreak of the great conflagration in his own territory went with a party of officers and a number of Gemini members as near to the scene of the "Worlds"End"as they could approach. From his graphic story of his experiences which were sent to Violet and her sisters Jennie Turmer had op copied some of the most interesting details of their letters at their permission;

"We caught a wagon train for the town of Mic-Clure micknell. three miles northwest of Ev Evangeline St Claire, and east of Rosa and Topsy, and ten miles from the southern surburbs of the great fire sweep which destroyed the city of Trinoque n early to a total. We had a magnificent view of the great forest fire eighty miles away the neares nearest we could approach as to go any nearer would have been certain death even at that distance because of the heat. Rising high into the sky from horizon to horizon the wast mass of rolling turnultous clouds of very flame was hea beautifully accentuated by the full glare of other fires, and the smoke itself above the flames shifted momentarily into new forms and drifting northwestward in low black clouds reaching to the western horizon and summing various reddish and pink colors. At Evangeline St Claire we ranunder this black terrifying pall. apparently many thousands of feet above us the solidity of which was soon rev ale revealed in the fires glare. The tornces of the wagon guards addedbto the effect, but greatly relieved the smoky darknesss. We had r ached Evangeline St Claire at three on the morning very oily indeed. There wasclittle suggestion of any horrible disaster as we rode through the town to the regions where the fire had raged and was stilll! raging only as a huge smudge making a rolling smoke sea so extensive as to reach from horizon to horizon. The brilliant glare of the fire even though so far away lighted up the region almost as bright as the rising sun and gave us a superb vice of view of the rolling clouds of smoke, all forms being that of caluliflower from the base of the wall of cloud but rising and expending and curling far above for many thousands of feet with a profile like a monsterous rolling false cirius cloud in the heated summer time.

But however nothing in mythology ever gave a suggestion of the awful fascination of this awful force of the uprush of heated air produced by the flames, presenting the subline unusual heauty in color and form above, but below the glare of the Infernal regions.

We reached a section section of country through which the fire had already passed. It was as if all the world of people had effectually cried out to arrest the termific hurricans of flumes which had raged up to the St Anna Cametery, cand which pitilessly almost melted the State Statue of the Blessed Virgin and another of St Ann, with which the people of the city had tried to stay the Red Plague, as at St Catherine the Lage of the Sacred Heart was said to have stayed a similar fire storm from movingupon Lu i Lucillie Ricksen S town.

We a pproached to the edge of the smoking in ferno of debrise It was like standing withinshalf a mile on the edge of the ernormous mouth of Hell. A hundred million volcanic eruptions combined into one couldn't make so much clouds of smoke. We could see diraly the extent of the destruction beyond the barrier of snoke wall which had stoppd at the edge of the Graveyard because of its size, and because the flames here had not been able to leap the gap. A better idea of the surroundings was obtained at dawn from a abundoned railrway. We saw southwestward or mastward rather what was left of Trinoque, a great square stone church and a few row of app arently fire proof struct1 structures inland in a sea of smouldering ruins of houses. N orth and east and south was that terrible wall of heavy smoke in side of which rose a thousand patches of flame in the form of swamp misma. All was snoke, snoke, anoke, and stillmore smoke with mo where the familiar appearance of goodly landscapes of beautiful forests of trees, flourishing towns and villiages. Even from this smudge though we were miles from it the heat was terrific. We ate a heaty lunch before the hour of sunrise, though there was no sun but continued gray darkness with blacknessoverh ad overhead and with a littlemore coming I of light, wh which was only as a twilight the great thrill of the scene was still more revealed. The column of smoke extendinglike walls so far and near as far as eye sight, could reach from northto south and in the south seemed higher and more massive rising as high asone could look up into the sky and retaining its rolls at the up or sections but in biger forms. Each portion of the clouds had a concentric motion and new aspects.. The southern wall floating on the tops tward the west showed exquisitive current as referees, day to the u per moving our ent current. It was like the decoration of the side of a great sarcophagus. As elsewhere a heavy yellowish white cloud hung over Evangeline St Claire city and territory and hides the flaming hilling country, I counted myself very fortunate indeed to have seen all day from leewardthis hurge spectacle of changing undiminished but horrible beauty. beauty.

The amnount of rulned land of forests in the path of the forest fire within my view e extended far beyond my calculation. Fancy so much forest land far down from the beginning point of the forest fires now left nothing but sens of still smouldering or dead ashes and half burned trunks, while elsewhere the forest fires still raging onward distrubiting to other forests the same fate and you will get an idea of the desolate impression of the dreadful scene va forest tragedy colossal to immeasureable size and most heartrending. .Like the disaster to Abbieann and elsewhere it is enlisting the sym, ath sympathy of the civilized world. Yet it'll take time for such a columnaity to be realised for the ammount of forests already burned over is over I,000 miles, and the fires have only begun. Two miles below Evageline St Claire city we struck the edge of the vast snoke wall, and our wagon driver begged us not to go any further on or we'd be into the edge of the conflagration. We had not the ha heart to proceed on so we started on the return journey. In many places northwest of Evengeline St Claire cities of temporary shelters had been built by the various roadsides in forest clearings like cities of childrens playhouses. Here women and children were huddled with their hedding, nawat awaiting the coming of what supple suplies they could ex ect expec t. All the men population in the districts were largely occupied in their efforts to fight the tremendous conflagration. Many two and four wheeled carts and wagons loaded with forest fire fightin g equp equipment were making their way along. In another clearing was a large encampment of soldiers with low abesto tents. Wear another large clearing cut through the forests in course white linen shrouds were the hodies of thirty three women and children who in flight through a burning sector lost their lives. Of all the refugees every one of them were sad, but nevertheless did not compalin in fact for so excitable a people they were indeed unusually calme"

In the meantime the Calverinian Government through the urgent request of Violet, and her sisters were doing all it could day after day to alleviate the horrors of the situation sending money to be expended in relief work, despatching high officials of the government to give aid, and encouragement by their presences, and men from hundreds of northern and extremely southern Culverinian cities, and many more towns, and even ab older hoys, and more hardier women were flocking out as volunteers to aid in the great fight against the red plague, of the forest. Often violet, and her sisters had been near the scene of destruction since they returned from their short-captivity from the region of A Angelinia St Claire, and whorever the tim was they were not in the armies they were amon the refuger refugeos lending their own personal assistance to the work of rescue. Obliged to leave their carriage, which could not nove over the smouldering debris chocked road, the Mivian Girls with difficulty went forward on hor seback, the animals sometimes in the burned sistricts floundering through our feet of ashes and burned trees and limbs stumbling into holes, and half blinded by the snoke and whirling ashes sent into the air by the winds. But these horses were used to every thing and did not fear fire which was an exception. But they were trained to brave these thingson r buring their jurney tward Evangeline St Claire they came upon the Mayor of the town. of Trinoque.

"How in the world did you escape from there?" Jennie vivian asked

"I put myself into compacative mafty. "was the repl y. "You did! What do you mean. "!

"Realizing the danger I left Trinoque while the people still remained. I wasn't foolish."

"What"cried Jennie with a flush of anger. "You a Mayor of a town too cowardly to share the dangers of your people while weourselves go through adventues that no one cares to hear about. I'll see to it that you'll be removed from office. The idea. A coward for a Mayor. Not in that heroic town."

Reaching Evangeline St Claire the bravelittle Princesses did what they could to expedite the work at centrail points of disaster more than a hundred dead hodies being taken from the ruins of the Cathedral in their presence. They stood with set pale faces watching the removal of the vistime victims and directing the movement of the workers and even joining in at times themselves. During their visit to the front they inspected the tem o temporary camp hospitals in which the soldiers and nuns and priests were caring for the burned injured and suffering, speaking kindly to the poor victims, being like little angels among them, giving them what comfort they could and asking what they could do to relieve their distress. Every request or dire desire was recleved by them with syp sympathy and orders given to have It Allfilled. A pitiful scene took place when they were around the bed of a poor little boy whose right leg burned so bad had to be amputated, and Violet bent over and asked what she andher sisters could do to comfort and aid him in his affliction.

"Send me my father who is servin g as a soldier in general Vivianannas army"said the poor little boy.

The Vivian girls were visibly affected, vand promished to do so. While they went from district to district they inspected the places where the refugees were housed doing what they could to improve conditions, and to add to the comfort of the sufferers. While there they decided to make an automobile visit to as far as they could approach to the ruined town of Trinoque, but the motor broke down, and they were forced to return on foot, walking a distance of twenty miles through the smouldering forest fires left by the passage of the main blaze days before, and displaying apower of endurance despite their discomforts and sufering and hardships of hungr hunger and thirst that surprised the natives. By Friday September the Thirteenth the danger to Evangeline St Claire was practically at an end for good. The main forest fire horror had passed on northward leaving behind it an immense smoke sea which spread like a thick heavy curtain over all the sky-The whole country lay buried in darkness and obscurity, clothed in a dense pell of smoke. At Calverine three hundred miles north of the fire horror there was nomunahine, it was as dark as a dark rainy day but some distance scuth hung a dark sombre veil. Even as far north as Abyss Abyssinkile more than

407two to three thousand miles away there was sunshine, but its light til trickled through with a sickly glare. The sky had a yellow color and sometimes even dunnish or brown and at times pale cream and other colors. At the city of Bonbon six hundred miles away from the forest fire but west of it the gloom was so deep every time there was a east wind or southeast, that telegraph poles twenty feet away could not be seen. Breathing was difficult, and the smoky atmosphere made the eyes water. At Mildred Greenburg however a favorable west wind had cleared the lower atmosphere of smoke but the sun did not shine and it was very dark. Everybody in many cities and towns of Calverinia and Abyssinkile too wore goggles. masks, and eye screens, the weather was torribly hot. It was believed there were sme six hundred thousand men at work against the flames ditching, making wide clearings, blasting, counter firing and doing everythingposed blast castey the progress of the conflagration. There indeed were grewsome scenes close to the forest fire zone. At Beppo Junction soldiers carried on the work of re rescue when the flames threatened there. It is interesting to learn that six or seven members of the Genini stood heroically to their; post of duty during the whole scene of the advance of the forest fire. Gingigore. Whilliam Schloder, Dargar and many others. Though the ob servation post occupied by them was exposed to the full heat of the dreadful conflagration raging thirty miles away, they remained undaunted at the irpost throughout that week of terror. On the fourteen of the month some of that Abbieunnian venturesome fouternity the news paper correspondents, reached the observation point of the Gemini, and heard the story of their experiences. For several days Dargar and his followers had been out off from the outside world, and threat ened by the conflagration, their rations consisting of bread, cheese and dried onions, untill on Friday a hardy guide was induced to push through the remains of the burned landscapes to them with some provisions. During the progress of the disaster the Professor had kept at his observation, taking observations day and night and making calculations in the mids' os the of the informo-noughly dressed helooked like am American Western Cowboy after a hard ride in a dust storm. The portice where he stood was half scorched by the heat, but as far as eye could reach an ocean of ashes, still smouldering tree trunks denuded of their branches were alone visible through rising fogs of clouds of maoke, while the main conflagration seen now far to the north. The monuterous path of the fire sweep was enveloped in a cloak of white puffy and rolly smoke as if it was the sky hidden in a sea of storm clouds. As the correspondents ascen asc n ascended the mountain that had partly escaped the worst of the conflagration they were surprised at the apparition of burned tree trunks still smoking, the smouldering of ground degris and the desolation left by the passage of forest fires. They were also suprised by a nanother apparation of forest rangers who had been recently trapped by the forest fires, and who suddenly emerged from somethinglike caves. One of the Gemini completed his record of holdness by going to a point far too close to the conflagration at the imminent risk of his life from the heat to observe the conditions them

Therefore the reader can be well informed in informed that the eastern parts of Calverinia down up from the southeast is being one of the most disasterious burned, countries in the whole world in this book from the story out, whether the reader can regard the number of terrific forest fires concentrating in so ernormous a space of forests or the extraordinary destructive fury of the conflagration. Forest fires are raging elsehwr e elsewhere but not to such a proportion .. Of forest fires of each more than a hundred miles in extent and up to a stretch of three hundred, to twenty miles in width or even to fourty there are no less than thirty six of them. The fire burning across the Mic-Whirther Run Terriroity, and through the Mic-Hollester Run regions heading for the Main Red Riding Hood Woods being much the worst of them known. In all I,000 minior other forest fires are burning. The Forest fire however heading east of the Abbieann territory rival all the others in size and magnitude, and are more continuous in their progress and more intense in fury n and the heat they throw, and the range of hills alre ady traversed by the flames is far greater then the Rocky Mountain range going through five western States. The Mortheast branch of the Bonbon Hills indeed is not yet traversed by the conflagrations, while one quarter of the Wivin Hills appear as if they were all in violent eruption from unusual strong subterranean forces, and make the smoke clouds of the eruption of Krakatoa and other volumnes simultaneously appear like a shouldering shoestring in comparison. Therefore these frest files, which 10? 10,000,000 men, and even rainstorms and flouds does not subdue because of the terrific heat as being the most terrible disasters on record. The h heat wales felt five hundred miles away has driven people to the north to escape the effects. The city of Calverine even now in October where at this time the highest temperature is fourty in the shade, is still at I34 degrees and people are fleeing for cooler regions with the suffering of thousands of prostrations and deaths from the heat. The usually cold climate of the Calverinian country for its winter seasons produce vast quantities of snow and ice which covers I all mountain ranges and fill up the cracks and valleys in their sides. Therefore whenever the winds were were on a southeasterly course, the intense heat even carried hundrous of do miles to the northward rise to high into the atmosphere makes the temperature even over the snow covered mountains at an elevation of fifteen to eightern thousand feet as hot as the same heat waves are in the low lands, and vast masses of ice, great fields of snow, and deluges of water roll down the hillsides into the plains creating unusual floods and driving the inhabitants before the torrents. Some of these torrents produced by the highly reaching hot waves tear up rocks in their course and devastated the surrounding country for miles.

In many sections the forest fires were accompanied by dreadful floods proc produced by malth m mountain snows caused by the heat and flames. The heavy clouds of smoke was seen at Galverine to rise by day from the so far distant forest fires, and by night the red glare could be seen. muring one dreadful heat wave in September caused by southersterly which conding off from the forest fires, deluges of water rushed from the heights of the Volcano Mt Calverine bearing along whole fields of ice, and rocky fragments of every size torm from the flanks of the mountain itself and curred to the huge Morma Run River making in it into a raging floods. But the most remarkable thing is the dreadful progress of the fie duringthe later part of September up to the time of the battle of Lebanon. Of this a last extended description is worthy of being given in this last chapter

On the eighteenth of September the forest fire was then racing for the Lebenon region sixty (ie miles northwest of Evangeline St Claire(I do :declare). It was preceded by a long series of mysterious explosions which was said to have been heard at a distance of one hundred and fifty miles.

The file was then raging northward and the advance guard was in about a number of smaller ones but winds then raging formed them into the union of an immense wave racing northwestward from the parent blaze, which crossing and burning on both sides of the St Anna river or wide fr creek not only drad it up because of the dreadful heat but dried the sands on the river bottom to a depth of ten feet.On advancing across a huge ravine the fie came to the margin of the big Sanders Lake which lay in the course of the river-Here it was arrested for a while, it seemed now as if the many thousands of fire fighters here had a dh chance to outwit the blaze--but the fire gradually encic encircled the lake and then went onward resuming its advance till it reached a wide long clearing. Had it not been for the terrific heat of such high reaching flames it might have been checked at this clearing, but too for another reason to unfortunately the wifre wave was too far extended by this time, and where it could not not its way across the clearing by burning along the ground rubbish it burned its way by flanking attacks, and soon the fire enveloped the clearing on all sides.

Embers in the meanwhile formed another immense wave of fire which advanced with great rapidity tward the forests in which at the time of the Lebanon battle, the Vivian Girls were having their adventues, and ultimately combined with the first wave to form a more huge wall of fire now rushing on twenty miles an hour. When the left wing of this fresh wave of fire reached. Turner Greek twenty miles south of the Lebanon Forest regions, it again struch a long wide clearing of the forests(these were natural clearings not made by fix fix hters) and a portion of the fire couldn't cross and was forced to burn up the channel of that stream tward the Lebanon forests-Had this clearing not interfered with the fire the blaze would have gone on its regular course and the Lebanon forest would have escaped.

After persuaing its course for several hours, the main hody of this conflagration reached the Lebanon forests, and then it was that Violet and her sisters had their stirring time in the forest bla blaz blaze as previously mentioned during the battle. After going forth the wildly raging flames reached another clearing this made by figh ters, but the flames leaped this gap and the fighters were trapped in a huge ravines and fought for six hours for their lives with the in in ferno roffin roofing the sky above them in roaring flames.After this it still continued up the chann el of the stream and began coming tward VanturaxRoad and river which it followed untill it threatened Lebanon itself.

Three days afterwards brought fresh acessions to the imaense ocean of fire still pouring onward over the lan de The fire in heading irrestibly tward Lebanon despite the inhabitants of all the men fighting it desperately continued on and there seemed to be no hope whatever put the flames as usual struck another Natural opening in the forest in that locality, and as this opening was one four miles wide, and ten long, and there being no way for the fres to cross as there was no ground debris in the clearing fortunately. the flames which had e pe persued a northwesterly course, was forced to take a new direction tward the straight west and east and then to the northeast, where it struck more denser for ests than ever. Here it persued a couse similiar to that as before but on a more winder ad and extensive scale, filling ravines with the blazing debrie of trees and spreading itself out in from t of Lebanon into grea er greater occurs of fire than ever, and Lasbanon was almost surrounded. The Clearing however was in the direct way of Lebanon and if the wind didn't change direction Lebanon was safe though the inhabitants suffered frightfully from the heat which bur sted all Thermonieters in the city. The fury of the cln flagration continued to rage around the city and so ernormous was the conflagrations that according to a careful survey at a great distance the whole together would form a a mass of fire at once the full size of the Mediterranean ses in length and width. Of the two arms of the fire the greater was that size, and the the less half as wide but three times longer. The height of the flames could not be estimated, but some eye witnesses testified that the eastern wave of the files attained on the forestedplains a broadth of height rather from twelve to fifteen thousand feet in height, that of the other was only about half as much Though became of the clearing the fire was some ten miles away from the city, wooden houses on the surburbs went up into flames from the heat and threatened a conflagration in the city. Hansons army had also fought this, Manleys army had run before it ran before it not daring to fight the blaze. The devastation directly wrought by such an immeasureable conflagration was not the whole of the dreadful evils thr they brought upon the unfortunate land and its inhabitants even far from it. Partly owing to the sudden melting of the snows and glaciers on higher mountains even not in the path of the fire by the heat waves brought up to them by winds, partly owing to the stoppage of river courses because of the damning up of the river by other disasters of thepasth! immense floods of water deluged the country far from the neighborhood, terrific cycloinic cyclonic storms originated, cloudbursts, hurricanes and fierce untimely out of season eletricial storms, the floods and while destroying many villiages and a large amount of agricultural and other property. Twenty big towns were overwhelmed by the raginraging flames or overwhelmed so by the heat as to burst into flames twenty miles away while the clouds of macke hurled upward by the draught of the flames covered the whole of the skins over the Calverine seas, and the smoke on several occassions were diffted drifted over considerable parts of the far Moragnuia and Protestentia nations, and even obscuring the sun way down in Glandelinia and giving the sky a estrange wried and gloomy aspect. In certain respets they reproduced the strange phenomena of the explosion of Krakatoa. The strange red sunset phenomenea of the latter were produced by the smokes of the gigantic forest files so far away. The whole world itself was astonished as the phenomena was seen in many countries.

.Out of five hundred thousand persons who had been driven from their towns and villiages by this "R d Plague, fifty thousand perished by flames, smoke suffocation, heat prestration together winII, I45003 head of cattle, hundreds of thousands of sheep and hundreds of thousands of hornes, and various wild unbula of the forests by countless numbers.

410 This dreadful destruction of life was caused partly by the direction direct action of the forest files, partly by the noxious vaports or fumes the fire maitted over so much of the landscape, by the heat, smoke, and windstorms, partly by the floods of water, partly by the destruction of the herbage by the heat and sunless weather, and lastly in consequence of the drying up of so many rivers which formed a large portion of the drinking water for the people and animals.

After this frightful progress of the forestvfires, and its serious disterous effects the whole population of Calverinia became appreh n apprehensive because of the terrific speed of the conflagration.

Mt Joan Volcano which had been the most frequently active volcano of Calverinia, which had a record of fourty two terrific eruptions was soon becoming enveloped in the flamen which caught its forested slopes and the people in its neighborhood at first thought these mountains had sprung into cruption again. The first inkling of the report that the fires had struck up to here was conveyed to even as far west as Domdobia Abbicannia by darkness as intenso as night. This palpable hist was soon confirmed by a direct news from Calverine that the forest fires had assumed an ernormous size.

On the Twenty fourt h of September a severe windstorm followed the same night by fearful noises alarmed the inhabitants of the towns near the volcano of what was to come and they flod. About noon the next day with a dreadful hissing noise the fire poured forth west of the Volcano and rushed for the forested valley. This torrent fortunately burned forward through the northern and northwestern sides of the huge mountain. The inhabitants of the villiages at its base were driven before the conflagration, but several of them were overcome by the heat and perished before they could escape. The whole mountain was enveloped in smoke clouds and appeared in as fierce an eruption as Krakatos itself. Even here all menvinhabitants of the threatened towns and villiages fought desperately to try and stay its ;r progress but in vain they couldn't face the florce heat ten wiles away. The rivers became sohot as to lill the fish, and to be even imap impassable on horseback or in boats of small size. Explosions from some where occured and made detenations so loud as to be heard over the whole territory. Two new conflagrations were formed to the east of the mountain which was eighty seven miles around its base then another on the northeastern, and the other on the extreme eastern slope of the huge forested cone. The fire however didn't burn around to the extreme north of the mountain slope but went its usual northeast course. The volumes of smoke risin g from the conflagrations assumed the very appearance of the flames themselves and ascended to a score of times the height of the I9,000 foot volcano. The mountain when active never had assumed dangerous proportions, and at the very outbreak of the disaster the majority of the inhabitants close to the comparatively safe volumno knew what was the trouble and had immediately fled screaning to every body"Run, Run tre forest fire. The or steam. Fortunately owing to the nature of the district through which the flames passed, there was on this occassion very small loss of life as every body had been warned by the rangers a day or two before the fire came up .

The rivers of the volcano on the north and burning sides were flooded by the melting ice and snow which had accumulated on the mountain. The floods however did no extent of "harm" to the fires and the waters in reaching fifty miles from the base of the mountain still were so scalding hot as to raise great clouds of dense stream.

The forest fire horror too was remarkable for the eletric phenomena which the rising heat produced in the atmosphere far of course out of their original course east or west or other directions. The most violent thunderstorm ever on record for hundreds of years with terrific showers of rain and hail, and wind were frequent accompaniments of this progressive disaster everywhere, even over the fire districts, and the very condes condension of the smoke clouds was so sudden and violent that great qun quanities of eletricity were developed though there was no rain.

The Conflagration around Mt Joan was indeed the most furious action of the flames around any mountain ever on record and to a dis tance of three hundred miles the effects of its heat was astonishing. At Calverine so far away by this time of the month snoke filled the air above the city so thickly that the sun could not penetrate them. The flames burst forth at first in three distinct great conflar rations and after ascending the forested slops of the mountain and joining with the main wing of fire rushing past the volcano to the east and west the flames soon united seemingly in the air in a troubled con u confused manner. In a short time the vo, whole mountain and others forested ridges near it appeared like bodies of fire extending the conflagration in every direction and rushing upward. The fire continued to rage with unabated fury un till the s darkness caused by the quantities of black make from other section s of the blace finally obscured them, at about eight P.N. smoke at this time became very thick in the sky as far west as Francis Atlanta. Twenty eight miles west of Mt Joan a violent whirlwind believed to have been caused by the heat ensued, which blew down nearly every house in the villiages and towns carrying the roofs and lighter parts away with it followed by electrical storms and dashing rains over the whole country side far west. In the city of Joan its effects were much more violent. tearing up by the roots the very largest trees, and carrying them in the air together with men horses, cattle and whatelse or whatever else came within its influence. This account for the vast ammount of floating half burned trees seen on the bigger rivers later. The whirlwind lasted about two hours. Of all the villiages around the territory of Mt Joan, Joan city though partly destroyed by the windostons was the only one remaining. In other sections no vestige of a villiage was left and a great loss of fire from wind and fire occurred. From the most peculiar and particular inquiries and investigations made, there were no fewer than one hundred and twelve thousand inhabitants in the territory at the time the forest fire came to Mt Joan of whom only five or six dared toremain behind. All the rest had fled. Still onward the forest fire went.

STARRING OUTTHOUS HIS ANTH HES...

EVER: as his burns was , which he received when he rescued the great general aronburgs from the revaging forest fires, which took a series of chapters, to relate his adventures through, it dis not, because of his strength take long for him to be on the road of recovery. The general himself was more severely burned than Starring, but all the time since his rescue however he did not relinquish the command of his army either on is camping or marching. Of course Starring being faithful to his friends, Violet, and her sisters,,,,, and not intend to give up his adventures, especially when for them he had decided to try out his lock in secure the information which they too had been after the held by in his cot had heard lots recently of the disasters of the past, the predicted progress of the enemy, the so called victories at the battles of Evangeline St Claire and Big Girlknool, and so on.

The news of the floods had bothered him a good deal, and so also the awful forest fires he had heard of, which had been consuming the vast forests since June 1912.

Wile on his bed he had taken a map given to him by Jack Evas Evans and hed traced through the news the r progressive movement of the fire cince its start. Of any serious nature, the towns of polores, and estellic Junction were the first hit in southeastern Calverinia. Secon ame the destruction of Irlenetown and many other plane places too numerous to mention here, with up to this time over five hundred miles of vast forests burned, light after the buttle at Nelkingburg or Oedernine, the fire a sea of destruction stormed up to Oedernine Crock, pussed the city of Nelkingburg, moved on to Collyer and stalktanck and destroyed them.

To prevent his army from destruction general manson Viviani had been compelled to throw his whole command into the conflict against that meething hell as a it reared across the stream and headed for Fig Betty Fees and struck a portion of Meadow Ho was worsted in his conflict against the flames but his desperate aggression enabled his his command to retreat. The fire prevented the victory necessary after the buttle as it enabled the enemy under Manley and his commanders to escape from general Vivian.

From here it mood moved for Angelinia Agathia threatening the town or city twice but changes of wine fortunately made it go elsewhere. In this section Angelinia Agathiae and other big towns were devastated. Evangeline St clare right after the battle was threatened, and Manleys armice and also Vivians near Sound good now were in danger. This fire also struck Conventinian Concentinian Archburgs army, in which which fire harricene Starring saved Convert Arronburg from being killed.

There were many other points through which he was able to trace the r progress of the ernormous forest fire, but big as the fire was so far, he was more interested in the results of the other disasters of the past, especially the flood.

he maned on the situation for quite a long time and then was nuclearly aroused by a guard entering the room. He steed at attention untill the general citting and " Well?"

"General Arrenburg is coming cir. - he said, and saluting he left.

in a few moments the general entered with his arm still in a sling, but no longer in a wheelchair.

"pead this news in the paper" the general said and he handed galter the news which he glanced over for several minutes in silence.

"Well" said walter." we have literally a plague of great floods, forest fires, explosions and everything classit is surely chocking, and it makes me more determined to find out who is really responsible. And I'm going to do it iff' have to go the through hell for the purpose."

"Eut you are not in no condition for such a trip." said general Aronburg. "You know how badly burned you are. Petter be careful. You know how Gertrade took : care of you and yot nhe had to go away now to rejoin the Vivian Girls who are going to make the came attempt them selves. But you beter listen to reason."

"Yes but mapose they do not succeed, it is the most dangerous and difficult mission they too have undertaken and they'll only succeed by a miracle. And you must'fnow also though they don't know it, that this forest fire is touching the region of imported Valley and boading for sound none and moneral Monleys army will be hit. If it is then the fire will frustrate their hopes to win. Then the Glandelinian army will have to move off with such haste that they'll never have the opportunity to me succeed in their purpose. So I must try my best too."

"Tail you are the kind who will have your way." eaid the general looking troubled.
"I thought your trail in this experience would have changed your mind. But I see it don't. But I do not like the proposition at all. The enemy is dangerous by now, and I must warn you by now that the enemy know that many are trying to find out all about the causes and the originators of the flood and other disasters, and they are surely either on the lookest or are so quiet that they won't allow any of their conversation escape to even any of their own under officers or any one whatever. Every one sumpets general John Manley is at the bettom of this, but no one can prove it as no one has any evidence, an, one who could really get: That information for the Vivian Girls would surely recieve a annual reward. I therefore hope you God's blessing and good luck if you do continue on your ju quest. But nothing can be some without his help you know." The general was then silent for several moments as he pendered over something and then he continued;;;;;;

"I have marched my armies through the wildernone of this war torn world, and though so far I have not been in any unusually sharp battlen. I have once lighted on a certain spot, where once in the war I was seriously engaged, and that was the battle of Jennine parmer. He o liever during my advance, no matter where I fored my armies on did ever dure lay moself down for at least an all nights sleep. Often I've slept on my horse while I reder rode on Every movement of my armies on the march was a bad dream. I've seen the Abbleann flood though, said nothing about it. By army was near by, and saved a few from floating house tops. The we, this war is going on and with me not yet as seriously engaged as I desire. I feel like a men clothed with rage, standing on the street begging, I feel like I had a great burden on my back. But I cannot battle the enemy he won't fight me. The glandelinian generals who I have permed and tried to good into a battle run off. From all that has occured in calvering and elsewhere since this cruel war started I have wept and trembled.

I have written out a sort of book, and wrote therein of what has occured, and have a long list of disasters. Many times I have broken out into a lamentable cry; when my generals questioned me about the i situation. What shall our Government do in this case. I cannot help it."

In this plight I have continued on the murch, refraining myself as long as I could, that none of my staff, or retainers should ever percieve my distress, but I could not be silent long, because my sorrows, excitement and troubles increased, my siene sense of amonding disasters stalked in the open air, wherefore I at length told the situation to all the officers, and I said to general Vivienna, "Your Excellency, I said," Our country it seems from these disasters, to be undone, especially by reason of this burden produced by floods entosions explosions, and terrific fires, , that this burden lay hard non upon the nation, and I have also beein been informed for certain, that If something is not done sooner or later that this our states of Calvernia and others will be burned of in all her forests, in which fearful overthrow, all our armies shall miserably come to ruin, except the which I see not yet some way of escape can be found by the quick mobolization of the whole nution against wicked clanaelinia.... """ This my generals and all other officers, were sore uneazed, not that they did not believe what said to them might be true, but because the menunce seems so great Now my dear friend, but walter starring, they all think because of the adventure you are continuing on that some frenzy of distemper has got into your head. Of course for me too there were times of great trials, the nights had been as troublesome to me as day during my marches and campaigns, and most of the time instead of spending sit; nighttime in sleeping, I in thinking of these fierce disasters have opent the greater parts of the days and nights in sighs and tears. I tell you my boy the situation is growing worse and worse. Ever one of my officers is beginning to be hurdened against your intentions. No matter here you faith might be you sure won't succeed. The Vivian girls have been in Manley, camp a long long time and they never made an inch of ground in their quest, and never will. If they con't win you cannot either. Therefore take my advice and give it up. It's too dangerous."

Built r gturring nowever did not intend to give up hopeions as the case is then the general had left he began to pender over the situation and condole over Galverinas misery-then recovered cafficiently well he would walk in the Company Streets, reading ad and sometimes praying, and thus for four days he see spent his time.

then again he was walking the company streets full, recovered from his injuries. gtarring was reading a map of calverinia, and also greatly distressed in mind, and as he continued to think it over he baret out crying. What shall I do. Give a it up, or continue on. If some one does not succeed how can Calverinia and her sister states be saved from total destruction. I'm sure the enemy has won the war already."

he then looked this way and that way as if he would make up his mind to start, yet he stood still, because he was not well enough to go yet according to his doctor-Finally another officer was coming tward him, but an officer of inferior rank, but his friend, and after saluting he aged:

"Your Execellency for why do you look so worried. Thy cry. "?

General Starring answered; Sir I percieve by this map which tells of the disasters of the past that Calverinia is like a present condemned to die on a cross, and after that to come to ruin. I'm advised against continuing on my quest, and I find I'm not willing to do it,, nor able to be sure whether I'll succeed. The enemy knows about it that many are trying to investigate those responsible for the flood, and they do all in their power to preven such news leaking out."

"Then said " said the officer. "why not willing to give it up. since your adventure will be attended with so many ovil perile."?

."General Starring enswered;

"Because fear that this burden that is so heavy upon the AbbleannianGovernment, to care for the refugees, to ready the dangers and to investigate floods and fires is like sic synking some one lower and lower than the graves, and whose if I give up my purpose, Abbleannia will be like ne sinking to total ruin. It not entirely victory bit, landelinia at least really is on top, and sir if _ bet not fit to continue the quest because it seems or is so difficult, I am not fit I'm sum to go back to my commands, or face the Princesees, I'd rather go to judgement, and from thence to a frightful execution, than full, and the thoughts of these things could make any one cry."

"Then" said the officer"If this be the situation, why remainhere remain here, idle!"

General Starring answered. "Because I do not wish to go now untill the doctor says I'm well enough to proceed."

Coneral starring then walked away.

The next day he was looking over enother parchient roll, on which was written statements and lists of the floods past, what they did and what other floods in the future will do.Another officer standing near gtarring was looking upon the general waiting for orders, as he was to accome any the general with several others as a body guard-finally when the general was finished the officer asked;

"When you a start on the adventure, where will we go."
The general pointing with his finger at a dense forest said;

"Do you see yonder woods?"

"The officer said" no"...
"Then said the general;

"No you see yonder hill top par partly clear of firests?"

The officer said;

"I think I do."

"Well keep your eye on that section, and map it up for to morrow morning we go there directly, so that we shall see a good view of the country. First I wish to go up there to see whether our section is cleared of the forest plague. The fire frustrated my first effort. Up there I'll decide best what shall be done."

So on the following morning they started. They had not gone far from the camp, but soldiers and and officers perceven, it began to cry after them begging them to give up the foolish attempt and return. But general Starring thundered back.;

"I'll not let snything make me give as my purpose." so he soked not behind him but continued on tward the forest. Many o soldiers came out to watch them go, and as he want off some, smoot their buds, some called them fools, others prayed, and others oried after them to return, and smoot those who did so there were two that were resolved to fatch them back by outrastica. The name of one of the officers, was marteneous, Janes, and the other that be countries, both lieutenants, one the pirat pleatened, and the other tar Socond.

No w by this time Starring and his followers about ten had been gone a good distance from the camp, but however these two officers were resolved to persus them on horseback which they did, and in a very short time they evertook them. Then said seneral starring:

"Boys why did you come?"

"We wish to persease you to return, to go back for is. If necessary let us go with others in your place. This is no mission for a general Your Excellency. It's too dangerous."

"That can by no means be" said the general, "We all dwell in a coming of field on see destruction, the State where was born the worse war on record. I see it is to be so, and the country dying sooner or later, will be one in the power of landelinia sinking lows. Lower than the grave if I do not save her. This country from the forest fires and other disasters puts as in mind of a place biming with fire and brimestone, floods of hot water and sternal darkness, as it had been so dark so long because of the smoke of the forest fires. Be content Lieutenant, and go along with me, but I'll not turn p back."

"What" said the lieutenant "Are you still intention going on such a dangerous missing?"

"Yes" said general gtarring" or what we can o accol accomplish is not worthy for out cause if we do not try to succeed. Our cause is not worthy to be compared with so holy a cause if we do not have brare officers. If you will go along with me and mythollowers, and hold it, and help me win the quest you will share in the same reward, for what I do, and where I go is enough to make a good history of heris heroism, one away with as and prove my words. I'll win yet."

"what are the informations that you succeed, since you leave the sufty of a strustrong christian army to find them. ?"

"I suck to find out who made the floods, who ordered them, who defiled the country by these disasters. It is more difficult than any quest made but those who diligently suck for it will win out. They must or the cause is lost. If Violet, and her I sisters can not succeed I must."

"Tueh" said Lieutenunt cantorie- Away with such foolishness. It is too dangerous.
"Will you let us go in your place or no?"

"with not I" said the general Because I have set my mind upon (t.1'11 go and suggest or parish."

The other lieutenant then said to his companion;

"Come then, lieutement le let us turn again, and go back. If he must go he meu must, but we'll continus to pray and have Massen offered a for him. It sooms in impossible but ut it must be done. But I'll bet they'll meet a with a gompany of those crazyle aded coxombed alandelinians, that will take a fancy to put them out of the way, y ald norm more damperous than those i wiser in their awn eyes, than seventeen men than can render a reason for seing.

Than gald the other lie depent"

"non't be discouraged, if what the general sage to tro, the things he looks after. if successful is eafe for the nation, my neart inclines to go with themseneral. "griat more fools atill.Re ruled by I wise reason, and go back to camp, who kno s who knows what aungers Lurk in those dreadful woods. Maybe a forest fire will come up. Everywhere there is danger. Come buck with me and he wise for Heavens sake." But general gtarring a said;

"May but come with as lieutenant, there are such successes to be had which I spoke of, and if victorious in our 4 weto many more glories besides, in this world and the next for so holy a cause, if you believe not me, then try and be confirmed."

"Will Lieutement Jammes" said the other" I begin to come to a point, I intend to go along with the general, and to take the chances and cast in m, lot with him but your Excellency, as you know where you can ensure such information?"

"This map directs me to find one of the Glandelinion armies under Jonnston Jacken Manley, and we can find instructions by the way."

"wall then general I'll re with you."

Then they went on. The other lie tenant on a ing his head saily said with himself. "I might is woll go along too for I wold foreach a general under any conditions." Now starring and those two lie demants went talking on, and they began their discourse tous:

"Woll has iten ant James now that you are persuaded to go with me, how do you fare on the news. Had even general arrenbarg himself but felt what I have felt of the powers and terrors of strong "Landelinia, and of what is jet unseen concerning what landelinia is, Pris Glanda linta IS winning the war for sure. Any one can PROVE it." may happen to our case, he would not that lightly have given no the wrong advice.

"Come, come general, since there is none but us twenty officers here, tell me further now what the things are, and how the country and Its cause is going to ruin and whather we are going to avert the coming disaster."

"Well" said general starring, I can better concieve of them with my own mind than apenk of them, but jet since you are deserous to know, I will let you read some of the news when we secure a paper semewhere."

"And do you think such news as that of the enemy being alread; on top, and winning the war are certainly true.?

"Yes verily, for it was given out in news by many war correspondents and generals of other armies that cannot make a mistake."

"Wail said. What things are they?"

"There is an endless horror caused by the enemy already still going on, and Vivian mickey cannot be cutared, Manley is still confronting general Vivian at the vinicity of Evengeline St Clare, the Butionals could not drive the enemy, from the territory of mig Girl gnool, and despite the difficulties that have been produced by the big flood, general inner Heidl Myletze with an army of 345,000,000 men and hundreds of thousands of artiller, added with nearly 45,000,000 cavarly is heading for Doroth, gale and Angelinia Agathia to strike us a vital blow." "Wall said, and want olde sir, ?"

"Myletze will fight like a fary for there is a grown of glory and heroism to be given him if he wins, and he will not allow himself to be defeated. Of all Glandelinia generals no christian general can beat him. None ever did yet."

"This is very discounsking. And what else sirt" "Angelinia agathia though saved from forest fires by flood, is not safe from the enemy, there is crying and sorrow everywhere, and Calverinia is down and out." "And what company shall vic victorious alandelinia Myletze have in Angelinia

"There he shall be in possession of moreor vivians Palace if it survived the flood, rumors are that the very seraphine and cherubine, creatures that will dazzle your eyes to meet or look on them fear Myletze. There are tens of thousands of the Gemini who have gone beyond that place, to view Myletzes advance. None of them are doubtful but fear sure My letze will carry the place as the floods rendered its mobeli ration camps almost useless, half the army is elsewhere that should us defend both places, every one in that vinicity is fearful of more greater disaster. In a word we shall I fear see Angelinia Agathia in possession of the Glandelinian hordes, there we shall see herror upon herror, we shall see men wemen and children cut in pieces, burned in flumes, exten of beasts, drawned in the still remaining floods, he cause they are of the christian side. Oh we'll get it hot. I KNOW it."

"The hearing of this is enough to make me feel discouraged; to break ones heart. But are these things really true and not exaggerated. Cannot be possible with our cause so righteous a matter. How shall owe get proofs that this is a fact. Our cause almost as great as the cause of Our one True Church in this coul country should be be prevailed against. I cannot believe it."

"thy all the newspapers of the country recorded everything that is going on, the truthful substance of which if we truf truthfully be willing to believe it, will wake us up, and have means to prevent the disaster before it is too late. A country in a righteous cause loses freely at the beggining you know, though no one knows how the worm will turn. B, being careful we can in the long run change these conditions. Therefore my quest must and shall been success: If I fail, or violat and her sisters fail, then all will really be lost."

Well sire said the liestenent, glad, am to have had the chances to hear of these things before it is too late. come on let us mend our pace." How just as they had ended this talk, they drew near to a very miry piece of ground that was near a stream close to the forest, and not hardly sooing it in the dim twillight they enddonly stopped into the diagorous bog-dere therefore they struggled for a time, being graviously covered with the gud dirt, and they begun to sink in the mro.

"Ah general" said the Lie tenunt. "Where are we now. ?"

"Truely" said general starring "we are in a bog."

"Is this some of the tricks of the enemy you told me about" said the lieutenant ungrily. "If we have such ill speed at our first setting out, what may we expect between now and our journe s and I tell you sir, we must keep our eyes open. This is q starter you know If I can get out with my life. I'll help you out. "And with that he gave a desperate struggle, and got out of the mire. For a moment the general was left to tamble in the alough alone, but at the advice of the lieutenant he still endeavored to straggle to the prepar side, so he and some of the officers could rouch him, the which he did, but he had many go fur that for a time they could not draw him out. But some of the others then came up on the run, and asked the dieutenant how he and the general had been mired."

"Sir" said the lieutenant we aid not see it in this durkness."

"Eut why did you not look for the road."

"We ware so deep in an interestin; conversation, that we did not watch where we were going and fall in."

"1911 help jou get him extallers your Excerdency grab hard hold of this brunch." "The general did so, and finally they draw him out, and they retrauced their steps to sound ground, and the less least big affected by the accident continued on their way.

Then doep ite the adventure the conversation started answ. The other lieutenant Baid;

"Bir wherefore since Calverinia is a heart of Abbieannia is it that means should not be made to prevent all this, that all sections of rivers should be mended and guarded that the poor inhabitant unts could be more secure from the destruction of "The situation" connot be mended, said the general. "This si such a situation as cannot be mended without the necessary means, it is the purpose of the enemy to goo to it our plans cannot be carried out on that line, and therefore the floods and other war horrors have continued for still as even our overnment is awakaned about Gilverinia's said condition, there arises in the souls of all of our Covernment Officials, many fears and do doubts, and discouraging apprehensions, which all of them get together, and settle in one place, and this is the reason no attampt to prevent the disasters can be made. It is like rying trying to file in the blough of corond we read of in the Pilgrime Progress. It is not the pleasure of even our main Imperial Covernment in Abbie annia that this nituation throughout Colvertals should remain so bad, all officials, have sent many laborers by the direction of his majestys surveyors been for these last tw 1 twelve months of awful war c war disasters employed by all means known to try and prevent these awful scenes by even tricks on the enemy, if perhaps the situation might be mended, you and to my knoweldge, and of general vivian and others, the enemy have as to say frustrated thouseness of dillions of cartloads of instructions, plans, and so on that have at all seasons been brought and made out from all places of the Emperors dominions (and they can say they are the best plans to make good the ending of this awful war situation of disanters-if so these awful conditions might be mended-but the disasters have continued on still, and so will be keeping on, despite that all have done what they can ouk o Know the situation of our forests. True there are or had been by the direction of the Emperor some strong bodies of tropps troups placed on some leeves, even through the very midst of the heart of the war zone, but at such times as the levees do spew out filth, these guards are hardly suffucient, they can be of so purpose, notwithstanding the efforts made to keep them there, but they ha can hold their own when the ground is good.

Even because he stood for all of this, some called amperor ivian a wise man for now compalining, and some called him a floo fool for hazarding all this for a cause he was not sure of winning, others aid mock at the results of the disasters, saying surely since he begin to venture into the war, I would not have been so base to given out for a few disasters, and every one throughout the nation derided the Glandelinians all over."

Now just before they had entered the woods, they empied some one afar off coming through an open clearing in the woods to meet them, and their hap was to meet just as they were crossing the wa, of each other. The man were the uniform of a glancelinian soldier but he was not walking like such a man. This man, then meeting with general Starring and having some inkling of nim and his follows followers, for the general setting off from general Arrent orga army for a certain purpose was noised much across, not only in all the christian territory, but also there was denger of it lurging through evil nource. It was becard jung Evines in alsouise returning from a scouting tour He was alone and no knew of galtern intention

"his now peneral starring, whether away after your adventure of the forest fire!" "A stirring anventure indeed as ever I think may christian g neral had. And wherus you ask no to where i'm poing I tell you sir, I am going on my quest of which you are well aware of, for in this as I know well, I shall obtain something in the way of ness that shall jut alverinia and her sinter states in a may to be rid of her burden of disaster horrors, and a chance of a throwing out of the enemy." "Has thos a confidence in 20 minston, General Arronburg, neem tell you heem vor congerous. maybe hever succee."

"Yes I know it is dangerous eir, but you know Calverinia is so laden with this barden, that the Governments cannot take the means to sugger all those who are nomeless, and _ think it some one loss not find out who is really responsible all this cannot be stopped, and even the war will be lost. The Viviar Girls sent he, and it is my duty to perform the mission oven at the rink of my life if need be."

"Bull" sain ceneral wons, "will young narker to mo, if T give ze , ze good council!" "If it be seed, I will, for I knowers, over country stand in need of help, and good council will help he perform my duty."

"I would savise he then that you moveld now do your duty as i set I eas fit to nelp the country to get rid of an earden with ze all next, for the Government will never be nottled in we mind, till zon, nor can we all onjoy the bonefits of the blessing of me holy Peace for it (pantry, which we wish Goa restow woon as!"

"That is and , sook to ac." sale valuer Starring, for something most to done. which seems impossible to be done to aid the povernment ease the purden of the war torn states, but with all communications out off by fires, floods up other undaters even the powerf A Abricantian government senset no it, nor is there as, man in the country that can also our government to take much a purner of norror off attieunctur shoulders. Therefore I am going this way to resume my quest as I have told you perore I and general arronburg were injured in the fire, that I may find out who are respos responsible for the norrers."

"Well Walter out ees foolies council ye gave yourselffe. There ees not a more dangerous and troublegone way in ze world thun ean sat ento which jou have planned to go; ed which so weel find if me go on taking we own council. You ask me whywell , weel may foist. Of mourse we all like se exciting advertur, but not se advertur with so farial result hear me, I am n older thun thou, I am more experienced , with ze country, and ze enemy, rave been in 20 peril mine golf, thou art like to meet weeth in 20 way, wearggoneness not good for your oncertain, fainfainess, embashes, hunger, anecessaries of we perile, newconcer, achoerous bogs, forest fires, and in a word antimely death, and never accomplish your mission. These things are certainly true having been confirmed by many testimonies. To risk perils onces arily ees a sin, mortal probable if we adventure trings we death and why should a general like you throw or cast hi hoomself away so careless by Giving heed to your own council, when ze know nothing about 20 country. May man, that a that nill you intend to go sen wan beeg forest fire, so nee helifire approaching like so crasy tidal wave I sum heem for _went we way to secut, and behold when _ got hard by se beeg hill top, that I looking twaru ze southwest was ze spell bound, afraid to go further, lest the cloud, observed seem to be something solid and to fall on my head, wherefore I stood still and boneld zo biggest or we worst fire I have over seen it. Let ees coming like ze beeg hurricans, And on ze adventure no matter where ze go do not forget to always, LHOUS ALMAYS'PRAY"

"I know sir, and this burden of the States v over the condition of galverinia is more terrible to Abbieunnia than are all these things of which you mentioned may I do not care what I meet with in the may if , can also succeed in my mission and stop these dreadful disasters made by the wicked glandelinians, "

"How come cet you heard of all the news of ze disasters in heem zo foist place?" "By reading all newspapers. And Violet and her sisyers sisters told me." "I thought so." said vans Evans, nd And it has happened that many others have ttempted to go on such adventures, but it seems like meddling i wiz things too high for them, and they run all chunces of different peril, regular desperate ventures to obtain they knew not what, and never succeed in their efforts..." "Woll' said Walter"I know what ; would strive to obtain. And that is the knowledge of those who have caused the disaster."

"Put why will youse seak for information ziz way, seeing so many dangers attend it when you could commission ze others to go on ze same errand? Especially snce eince, had youse but putience to hear me, I could direct youse to a meuns of obtaining what youse desire without so much dangers, that youse will in ziz way run into if you are not careful. You and the remondy is at hand. Besides I will add that instead of thoseedangers, yours will most with more success."

"Thy near yonder villiage (The villiage of Seltorm) there dwells in his headquarters general grancis .ivianna, a very great invistian officer, and a man of a very good name, that has skill to help men and spies off on such adventures as thine are, Yea to my knowledge, he has done a great deal of good this way, " ay besides he has skill to do all he can to aid y those on a quest to success. His army is not far off as he is approaching to join general Arrenburg. To him you should go, and be ad vised and helped presently. His army and the town is not quite a half mile from this woods but to the east, and if he should not be in his headquarters himself, he has any one of his staff who can sumo summon him, they will do it. There I say that youse may be eased off too much peril. '

Now was Starring put somewhat at a stand, but presently he concluded"If this be true which general grans has said my winest course is to take his advice, and with that he suid to grans;;

"Bir which is the quickest way to general Vivianius house!"

"Do you see yonder low hill clear of woods?"

"Walter answered" Yes very well."

"Well" said Evans" Tward that hill you must go, and you'll come in sight of the army. The first house you come to in the outekirts of the town is his own headquarters. Here I 11 give you a pass written in my own hundwritting y so that you will be admitted without trouble.".".....

So walter turned out of his way but he was about half an hour of walking with his companions through briar and brush before he came within sight of the distant camp. He was admitted when he showed the guard the passess pass, and soon he was in the generals headquarters. The orderly after saluting bid him wait untill he sum oned the general.....

pinally he saw the general coming to meet him. After a salute between the two Walter told of his mission and why his mission, and as he spoke the general appeared to have a severe and dreadful countenance,

"Well sir why do you wish to continue on such a quest?" said he.At which words general tarring knew not what to answer, and for a moment he stood speechless. Then said general "iviania;

"Art thoug the general that the Vivian Girls commissioned to go on this mission, and who saved general Arrenburg from the forest fire at the risk of being burned to death?"

-es your Excellency | am the man."

"Did they not direct you a way to general Johnston Jacken Manleys army?" "Yes your excellency."

.ow is it then, that you are so quickly turned out of your way. For you are far from your destination."?

"The forest fires persued me for a hundred miles and I found temporary shelter in general Arrenburgs army before it too was at struck. Many of th his officers persauded me that I might find you who could direct me an easier way."

"who was he?"

"General jack grans. He got me to yould at last, so , came hither ."

"What said that general to you!"

"Why he asked me where , was going, and I told him."

"And what did he say to you then. "? To asked me if , knew of my dungor, and , told him and I told him how the situation in this story because of the war stands."

"And what said he then to you."

"He told me he would show me a better way, and short not so attended with difficulties as the way sir that , started myself in, which way he said would direct me to you for proper information and advice. So I believed him, and turned out of my way into this. I came to you because I know not wa what to do. He warned me that he fours I'm in some danger at every step."

"Then " said general viviania. "Remain seated for a while untill , ponder it over teneral gtarring seated himself as directed. Then said general viviania; "See then that you do as I say no you refuse anything offered for your success now. If you allow the slightest opportunit, to ca escape you all will be lost. The main thing is during your adventure do not lose faith in prayer and in od, for if you draw back or lose courage, you'll surely fail. Thou art the man who is running into this great and lengthy adventure, therefore do not lose faith in your prayers to the wost ligh , for you can holp the Abbieumnian cause crush the foe, who has rejected the council of the pleased Lord even to the hazarding of the perdition of the whole nation gome day it will be wee to Ulandelinian, for she is underest

As general starring still stood at attention, general Viviania continued, "All manner of floods and horrors have been committed by the enemy, all manner of worded and blasphemies have been said and committed, and terrible deeds have been done to children in massacres that no one is allowed to picture. Your mission which wielet, and her sisters have sent you on is a hard task indeed, but if you continue not to be fuithless in ode help and believe ,ou will cortainly succeed. But you cannot do it alone five more carnot head to the things, shall soll, you. I will show you who it was that advised , on you to come and interview me and whom it was also to whom he cent thee. The general that met thee is one great master of Abbicannian and christian armion, the great and hon-rable guardian of the "Ivian Airle, and rightly he is no called, and who it was also to shom he sent these for my advisor. He savoured only the success of an hely cause for the sake of seeing the child alave horrer stopped, therefore he is found by the enemy no matter where he is seen to go, and partly because through him they cannot get at wielet and her sisters as they would like to, for he has and can save them through all perils, and because he is of such abaility that he will sook to pervert all the attempts of the "landeliniums to caps capture them. Now there are three things in this generals council thou must atterly obey, take hee- of;

I "Do the not head for that forceted ridge he spoke of and warned you against. It's near 5 ound end and a fire hurricane is sweeping on for it. When he met you he turned thee out of the way on time, may in the nick of time.

2.His laboring to render the adventure more safer for thr thee, so it will be a success.....

First thou must take his advice, when he turned thee out of the way of the great forest fire on toime, and you must consent to it too, because if you reject his council, then you might as well also reject the council of bod for the sake of a Cowardly action. From my own camps is the right road. To this pint he had turned thee, to bring to thee better council. Therefore do not reject his turning you at of out of the way of the forest fires, for we all abhor unecessary perils. Yet be careful ah what you do for they say it is as hard to enter johnston ,anleys lines as a sinful soul striving to enter at the straight gate, the gate that leadeth unto life everlasting. Thou must also abhor the meeting of any strangers whom you do not know or you cannot trust. Bosides he that will go on an adventure and throw away his life ruthlessly shall be a sucide. I say therefore be on your guard and avoid all total strangers. Thirdly you must not fail to continue on the way he advised rhee thee, and for this thou must consider to whom he sent thee when he sent thee to me, and how your success in finding at the clues you are after, in case , lolet, and her sisters do not succeed themselves will have means to take the heaven burden from the shoulders of our Abbieannian Government.

He who sent you to me for better direction and add advice, is one of the best generals of our side serving upon or under "mperor vivian. Calerinia is like a person in bondage with her children, and is in a mystery the most war devastated country over recorded since the world came into being or existence... Now if she is so badly devastated by floods, forest fire, and what not, and partly in possession of the enemy and all reilroad and other commutations cut off how can you expect the Abbieannian "ever-ment to do anything what should be done be when flood and forest fire prevents all means of rescue and relief. No one has been able to restore Calverinia to her normal condition. No country was ever put into such a situation as this one, nor even is like to be. You cannot be merely justified by accomplishing your mission, for by that deed alone Calverinia cannot not succored, Abbieannia cannot be relieved of her burden which gulverinia had placed upon her shoulders by means of the disactor. Therefore general grans who knows all this is your adviser, and by his advice and mine you will be able to work wenders for the nation, and cause Glandelinia to meet a great devafall yet.

Otherwise believe me there is nothing in all this noise that thou has heard of all efforts being made to stop these disasters, but a design to beguile the θ_A lverinia country of her safty in this war by bringing on so many disasters Q^n

After this gneral C Viviania pointed tward the hill tward which Starring had meant to go, and the hill on one whole side looked as if it had turned into some titunic volcanic oruption. For a moment this new scene almost made his hair stand up on ond. Then said the general again;

"As it seems Calverinia and her elector states for no reason at all seem to be under a curse, whether it be of some housenly visitation or not. But alandelinia is the curse."

"For a moment Valter Starring felt discouraged, he felt or looked for nothing but douth for the state of Calverinia, and began to cry out lamentably to God to saved the country and its people from the horrors of these war disasters, even cursing the time in which he had witnessed one of the disasters himself, and calling the government officials of the state a thou and fools for not being on the watch and from careleseness allowing these disasters to occur. He also was or felt greatly ashamed to think that spies used so frequently by so many christian generals, and the government of the various states could not have discovered the making of these dangerous mines that produced the disasters, and that through such carelessness the Covernment of Calverinia should have the almost prevalency as to allow these those things to go on unhindered. After musing for a while he again said to general viviania;

"Sir what think you'ls there hopes? Will there come a time when this will be all over and _landelinia driven out of Calverinia.Or does it seem she is abundaned like a child runawayslave. Is she in condition like some fool whose sin is not repentant and not therefore forgiven.?"

The general was silent for a moment then he said;

"The danger to Calverinia and her state; is very great, for because of the enemy of is ravaged by four kinds of disasters three of which as are the greatest floods, fire and explosion, yet you or the Vivian Cirls alone and escusting to bring redress. Put before you leave here go and and speak to general Hensenia about your purpose and he will give you a few pointers on how to start on your way suffly. Take heed however that they do not turn to the wrong course, lest thou run into the path of the forest fire and perish. That is a greater fee than flood or the enemy."

And he directed him to general Hansonia, and after he had kissed walter starring, he gave him a good smile-the while? and big him God speed, go being in a hr hurry he went on with some a haste, neither did he speak to any soldier or officer by the way, and when any one asked him a question he refused to answer his seemed to go whead like one who seemed to be treading on some kind of forbidden ground, and could not under any conditions believe himself safe, till he was before general Hunsonias headquarters. He showed the guard his passs, and he was admitted and told to wait and the general would be summoned.

At last there came a tall grave person in a piracely uniform to the reception room, who asked, who he was, whence he came and what he desired at so untimely a hour.

"Walter answered;

"I'm general Walter Starring. I am on a mission for the Vivian Girl Princesses. I have come from general concentinian arronburgs army, but an going to find my way to general Johnston (Jackaes) Munleys lines that, may find there is there can be clues as to what caused the disasters, while islet, and her sisters are tying their luck in general onh munleys armice. I Would thereforestr since, am informed that you can direct me a safer way around the fire plagues, know whether you are able to do it for me. #. $7.7."

"Imm willing with all my heart." said the general And with that he opened a little side door, and as general starring was stepping in, the other puled him in quickly. Starring sekedy

"Why did you pull me in so quickly like that."

"The general unewered"Not far from this housquarters there have been many strangers call on me of whom I do not like the looks of and , do not want them to spot you. They might shadow you." Then when they were secretly together, and the general had.... drawn the shades and lighred the candle, he asked him who directed him thither.

"General Evans directed me to go to gnoral general Viviania and the latter bid me come to you, as I did, and he said that you sir, would tell me what I must do."
"As long as you are well known by all of as Christian officers and soldiers, we will always have an open door before thesees thee, and no one not known to us can be allowed in here with us untill our macking is over."

"But said general Hansonia"How is it you came alone!"

"I have an escort but I did nt permit them to come with me in here."

"I see. And how is it thatbyour purpose have been recently so strongly advised against?"

"Because none of my followers and the danger to the country as I saw it. Evans for the nation, he did not advise against me in my purpose but delayed for for fear of peril too much in the Mic-Holloster Toode which I have left."

"Did any one of them know of your coming here besides your escent."!?!!!!!

"Yes all of general Arrenburge army knows of it, and at first many of their officers called after me t r to turn back against, but I listened not and came my way. The yivian Girls sent me and my mission must be accomplished."

"But surely did none of them follow you, to ask you to go back!"

"Yes, two lieutenants, and then they too changed their minds and accompanied me."
"But why did they not come through?"

"They did come through. We came up to a bog of some hind in the dark and we were caught .One of the lieutenants got cut, the other too, and both being unable to pull me oug out got help. I wanwanted colonel Hande to accompany me also but he did not desire to come, saying it is more dangerous an adventure than going through a battle."

"Well "that is strange" said general "unsonia"Alas poor foolish colonel. Is our countrys cause so small esteem with him that he counted o it not worth runing the hazard of a few difficulties to aid it in crushin g so vile anonomy as Clandeliniat"
"Truly, said watter, "I have said the truth about my adventure, and I have a good word to say for general Jack Evans. I in the nick of time turned out of a path

I was heading through being persauded by the arguments of Ceneral Evans himseld."
"Oh did he light per you again, what he would have had you sought for safty at thebest time. Evans and concentinian Arrenburg are both of them the best men to advise for the right thing that they can see be done. But did you hesitate to take his council?"

"Yos. I thought that big ridge tward which had gone as far he I durst untill he stopped me was a good observation point. It was sir as he was up there alimself, and believe me sir as he told me a big firecous raging south of it, and moving through the imperial valley tward sound nond. Therefore as the hill is in its path and it it is thickly forested with urpentine trees I was forced to stop and and seek year white."

"That forest fire is and has been the death of many already, and will be the death of many more, tis well you heeded his advice for , know the ridge you mention and a good part of it is alread ablazelif you had not heeded his advice, you would have been caught in the path of it, advive know f how fast it moves up a slope."."....

"Thy truely" said walter I surely do not know what would have become of me if , had went there, or if general jack wans had not happily met me again as . I was masing in the midst of my thoughts, but nevertheless it was ods warcy God's wercy that he came to me again, for else I would ot have lived to come hore. But now 1 a come, after after such an experience I did have in the past still more fit for a bed than for anadventure, or than to has sand sand stand talling with talking with a general But oh indeed what a favor this iddeed is for me, that yet I'm still still .livingto gain wimittance here."

"We make no objections to any one woll known to us, noth notwithstanding who they are, us long as they are not glundelinian spice in disgules, and there fore my good sir, come a little way with me and , will teach thr thee about the correct way you should go. Look before these, do you see yonder narrow road.? that is the way you should go. It will lead you a good distance off from the path of the forest fire."

"But" said walter"Is there no chance of the forest fire changing its course as they are likely to do, and are no turnings or indings which by a stranger may lose his way in time of peril?"

"Yes " said the general general, but there are many ways, and they are crooked and wide but you must follow what you think is the saftest."

Then walter maked him further, if he could not have means for good and proper o communications that would be necessary to transport in case he did find out an something important, for as yet ther, was no means of communications thereof nor could be by any means got any such communications without help."

"Well said the general"As to that it cannot be done, its your burden to bring back the information yourself its safer, and you'll have to ! bear the burden of that work, untill thou comest to the lines of general Viviens, or to Violet, and her sisters, for they s alone should recieve the information you are seeking for them. But before you will lave leave here I will snow you something that should be of some profit for you in your advanture."

so he gave a command to his orderly to light another candle, and when the orderlie brought one the general bid malter Starring to follow him, which he did it. He led starring into another praise private room, and big the orderly open canother dooor door, hen he had done this, the others drew back a curtain and Walter naw q large map of Calverinia and in the center of it the country almost had the formation of q cross with some one on it crucified. The map had a very grave appearance, this being the fashion of it, it was bordered by pictures of women and children who had pleading eyes lifted p to heaven up to heaven, other scenes were of great fires and floods and volcanic blasts of explosions, the world was looking on h in abject horror, it seemed as if everything on the map pleaded with or to Heaven and god, and on the top of the map was a crucifix with our ord crowned with thr thorns hanging thereon."

Walter was astounded at this and he asked after pendering on it for several

"It is a scene of what a grand and glorious state like Calverinia had went brough through for the cake of the cause since the war began. Every scene on this m.p map shows the horrors of the disasterous var, and where you see women and children with eyes lifted up to heaven, the floods raging everywhere, and the forest fires in view, it is to show you that this is what Clandelinia had done for come vila purpose, even as also though sees the women and children plead for succor from heaven, and whereas you see the world looking on in horror, and that a scene of our ford Crucified is above it, that is what in causing the horrors Glandelinia is signified as doing the same to God once over again. Now I have showed thee this map first to inspire you in your duty to your country the princesses and your home, therefore do not yould to any impulse to back out. And also the cruficied One you see on the map is the one who is to t be your guide in all difficult and dangerous places you may meet with in the adventure ospecially, dangers from forest fires, whorefore take good heed to what I have showed you, and bear well in thy mind, what you have seen here,,, ls lest in thy journey thou meet with some secret and disguised enemy who know your purpose, and preend to lee lead thee right, but their way goes down to capture and brings your death as a spy."""Then he tob took general Starring by the hund, and led him into a very larelarge room which was full of plans and mups, which had never been used, the which after the general hd had reviewed hi called je he called for his orderly to place in order. Now as he began to work a cloud of smoke entered an open window that both the generals and the orderly had almost been chocked. The window was immediately closed. Walter finally asked;

"_hat are all these plans and maps for." "General ganconia answered;

"These recently in a generalbig haul were captured from various glandelinian cumps, towns in possession of them, and so forth by spies and the Gemini, and most of them proved that of all nations alandolinia is the most defiled. He who brought the first of the strange maps is general purgar the famous reminified Gemini leader, but the others that brought the rest were spies and some of his members. I have boxed them all over believing they too would contain some closs cluss as to the origin of the disasters, but not so . Now whereas though see that so soon as the first began his sweep of the raids, the glandelinians in persuit did so fly and rush in all parts over the accountry that for a long time the countryside of them could not be cleared, that even the whole land was almost checked by secret persuars and trailers and what not, this is to show these in one way what dangers you face in your adventure at this time, instead of ma making it saftly, for the enemy do ravive, put strength into and increase the number of searchers, even as they forbid all strangers to leave in their own camps. Later on I'm going to burn all these before they are recovered by the omeny." Then the general again brought him to another room, where in one small bod were two children a boy and girl. They were asleop but looked as if they had been injured by something. Then Walter asked; Thehat has happened to these children?

The general answered;

"They were among refugous who fled before the forest fires last week. The one who rescued them wished me to have them stay till they recovered, for their parents are in the lines. This is to show that because of the fires what ever a forest fire does even to little children the enemy are fully responsible for."

Then a Red Cross came in with some medicine, and awakening the boy had him take it at which he mound and then lay us if exhausted on the bed. Then Walter being being moved with pity said;

"Expound their condition more fuller to me."

"So the general said :

"These two little children are two little forigners who have resided in the town of Beltorn with their parants, an Abbicannian father and a English mother. Theyall had a wild run before the conflagration but the children fared less luckil, luckily than their parents. For as here you see the condition of these two children, many things like this have happened all this year to others, they have gone through the first of their own experience now, it is evident the way things look they'll not escape this coming year either, for the situation for Calverinia is not good. ut as you see they have been badly burned, so it has happened with many women and children in the path of these forest fires."

"Now , see what the clandeliane do with their fires. "Faid palter. "Firet their fires burns the people out of house and home and then threatens many with death. Yet I'm sure in the near fature Glandelinia will not have much reason to laugh at us, because the has Calverinia overwholmed with disaster, at some day we will have our turn to laugh at landelinia because she trys to best us with disaster , for first must give place to last, because Calverinia must have her own time to come to give back to landelinia her own share. Therefore it is said that the " worm always has a farming".

"Yes it might come trus. Any one gotting last generally gives place to the best for there is nothing also to succeed, he therefore that had torn a land with horrors of disasters must needs have the time come to hishare its own misery in return. Therefore now Culverinia recieves the worst things, but soon she will be comforted, and glandelinia will be tormented."

"Then" said walter. I percieve it is not best for me to fail in my mission.

"You say the truth" said general Hansonia"For the things you need to accomplish are important, but the things you would not accomplish are disasterous. But let us hope this will not be so yet, since these disasters are so havor making, and again because so much of our cities and towns are laid under water, and such vast territories of the country are laid waste by forest fires, therefore it is the best to continue on till you succeed one way or the other."

ing with the fire striking across the breach they had made.

"This strikes me as a forest fire beyond control." said Starring." "Yes that is so." answers general a mansonia. "This forest fire appears in explanation as the work of grace that is wrought in the heart, because like grace the fire grows and grows and burns hotter and hotter and fiercer and fiercer , that not even the devil and all his angels can put it at out. All the conditions of the forests do what can be to maintain the fire, just like the work of grace is maintained in the soul. A forest fire once getting far advanced gets beyond all control. This is true with those now raging. All attempts have been made by all, cities are sending out the men not in the army to help the rungers in their buttle aminst it against it, all attempts have been made to extinguish them, or turn them aside, but the nature of the forests maintains the fire already sweeping wast territories of the country by the means of which notthat a withstanding all the fire fighters can do, the fire rages on more terrific atill."

General starring was greatly delighted by the pictures of the forest fire, and he examined the formations of the numerous men pictured there striving to repulse the advance of the fire. "Isowhere were many men in a abesto suits fighting small brush fires. Now was Walter comewhat amazed, as he looked at the other people where it showed the forest fire fighters starting back as the fire crossed the breach, while others still were hacking swaing and sawing and cutting down trees furiously. Then after these had cut their way through, and with the fire process; on it showed also that they could not do anything to brough it here either. Later starring found himself face to face with a man sitting on a chair. The man appeared to be very sad, sitting with his eyes looking down to the ground his hands folded together, and he signed as if he was heart broken. Then alter wondered ; "what has happened to this man, and he then said;"Who are you?"

"gow came you here!"

"I was took in. I was once a fair and flourishing home owner, a had a beautiful wife and children loving in mine eyes and the eyes of others, fair for heaven tee, and I had joy in the fact that I had such a brautiful home."

"Well then why are you here now. "!

"Be cause I am nothing that I was once before ".

"what was you before!"

"I was a happy man." "What was your trade."?

"I was a flourishing Layer, and now I am a man of despair, of sorrow, and feel like a prisoner who is shut up in an iron cage. I cannot get over this, I cannot. I'll, oh I'll go cruzy."

"But " asked Walter, how came you in this sad condition."

"The landelinians did it. I lost my home in the flood and my wife and children have parished. Oh good God, the glandelinians have laid the reins pon the lack of their lust, they have committed terrible murders, they have sinned greviously agaist the light of the word and goodest goodness of god, they have grieved the spirit, they have mussacred hundreds of thousands of little innocent children , they have insulted God and His plessed Mother and they have a gone from them, they have tempted the fe devil and he is come to them, they have provek provoked God to terrible anger, and He has left them to a terrible fate, they have hardened their hearts so that they cannot report, and I will be an avenger. I have asked permission to join the army and am waiting to get my admission papers.Oh 1811 I'll plump the glandelinians full of lead.Oh I'll be avenged."

"Then said Walter to General Hunsonia;

"But is there no such a thing as hope for Calverinia. Many men are a case like this, even women."

"Ask him" said general mansonia."

"Then " declared Walter" Is there no hope for your war devastated state, but that her population may be kept in an iron cage of horrible disactors and be depaired mless something can be done to stop the enemy and know the reason why the disasters were made and who did them?"

'No none at all. We are whipped."

"Yes but do not you have faith in our plessed Lord. Our plessed Lord is very pitiful and he will do all he lie can for your case. Of course we all know the nature of "landelinia for all time. She has cri crucified our Blossed Lord to her self afresh, has despised His Person, his His righteicusness, and have spilled when h His blood over the country, have ione despite to the Spirit of wis Holiness in r profaning his Holies, have shut themselves out of all His promishes,, and surely though landelinia seems successful there remains for her now nothing but threatenings, dreadful threatenings, fearful threatenings, of certainly ertain judgement, and flory indignation which will enable our cause in the long rum to devour Glandelinia as a she devil."

"But how did the flood bring you in this condition?"

"Why my wife and children periched, for the lusts, and wickedness of the clandelinians when they made the deluge. All the memories of what these disasters bite me and know mo like a butning worm."

"But cannot you not go back and investigate and find out if your loss if reported is really true!"

"It is true it is confirmed. I was at their burial after their bodies had been recovered. No words of any me has given me encouragement, nor can all the men in the world let me out of my misery.Oh eternity, eternity, how shall I grapple with the misery that these hated Clandelinians have brought pon me upon me. How I'll rail them when I face them all in sternity. I'll be a witness before God and all his His angels."

"Then said general Hansonia;

"Let this poor mans misery be remembered by thee, and be an everlasting caution to thee. This ought to good you in more determination for your quest.

"Yes but this is fearful" said Walter. "God and His Blessed Mother help me to p be successful in my adventure, and that I too shall give Glandelinia all she deserves for making so many like this man a life of such misery. Sir is it not time for me to go on my way now. Alt must be getting late. "?

"There is no thing more! I like to show you, then you may go."

This time he led the general into a room where an officer was writing on a piece of paper. General Hansonia said;

"Bir tell this man your surprising experience in your race from a terrific forest fire."

"With pleasure, git down general and I811 give you a good lengthy detail. I went out on a scouting tour four weeks ago for the purpose of learning why the enemy were moving their camp so suddenly to another quarter. As I had gone a good distunce, behold the heavens grew exceedingly dark, black, also somewhere I functed I saw lighting flaces flashes and heard thundering somewhere in a perfect salvoes, in a most fearful noise, that it with a strange heat, and a scraily tearing wind put me into an agony. I looked up at the sky and saw an awful sea ofcloud rack at an unusual rate, while far off I heard strange murmur ing and other sounds, attended with a thousand hissing sounds, the distant heavens seemed to be all in flaming fire, and the horizon as far as eye could see were as ina burning flame ..

Thatever was coming appeared as the advance of a terrible tripocal tropical hurricane, while for a time the whole countryside was being enveloped in palpable apalling darkness, the lund and sky in the distance becoming one immense huge rolling cloud of various shapes and blackness, yet sheated with intense flashing lights, where the helploss forests and hillsides momentarily was expected to founder out of side in this scene, while a wind was blowing in which it seemed to me that the forests would be tom to ; iecos.

.Darkness, flashes of redish light, strange whirlwind and blackness of the exist. It was a terrible scene and terrified τ wondered whether the end of the world was coming. Daylight all was gone, as if darkness in the soul, a noise as if floods of biasphemics as from the vaults of hell seemed to sound from that direction, so filling my mind and overwhelming the heart with the horrors of it, the extent and fiery force, as if god in His wrath had given the world a time of disaster.

I thought it was the approach of a terrible mighty whirlwind. It seemed as as if it was the valley of the shadow of death, and now clouds of smoke and flame as from the bottomless pit, envel ping the hills, and demons sputter ing sputtering their blusphemies of fire. It was so blinding and distracting that , felt as a if a demon was wrapping his filthy black wings over the scene, and in the distance I could have imagined the noise of flends flying in the far away darkness. It gave me a morbid state of and, so terrible that any one who ever experienced the like, almost starts back from even presuing prrueing the record of it record of it, lest its horrid faccinations shoull wahould come over him again, a state of the soul where the attempt to throw off and exclude a horrid thought or image only fixes it and bodies it forth forth in more pulpuble and hedicue reality, so that as a murderer persued by conscious the soul can only fly swiftly not during to look behind. The

Then I roulized it was a forest fire. I knew it was by reason of a most a flame big flame that issued up from the tops of a long forest of trees, but a good convictient distance between me and my observation post. I heard it also rour as if a tornedo was coming, and the scene was so dreadful that I functed it was the bottomless pit opening just beyond where I stood, and as if at of the mouth of which there came in an abundant manner, smoke and seus of fire with hodious noises. I then saw many districts of forests at once catch afire, and the flames appeared as if carried up into the clouds. Knowing I was in the path of it I finally left the scene and fled. But I could not outdistance the fire. It came rouring on with unbelievable speed. As fortune would have it , r ached . doop ravino into which I plunged and no sconer had I reached it the fire except past the ravine, making it above have a sky of thundering flames. The only way I saved myself was to stand waist doep in a long stream of water at the bottom of the ravine. nocks on the edge of the smelted frr from the heut of the flames, and so terrified was I from the scene that , felt as if , could have hid myself under the mountaine. I salt felt gs as if , was under a burning sea of hell fire. That I escaped with my life from the fire was a miracle because a muze of burning branches and even trees would fall down into the ravine and I either had to fight these blazing embers or dodge them as they fell. And After the fire had passed I had to romain there in that blusted ravine for two days and nights untill the forest debris and the air cooled off. "

"nut what was it that made you remain so long. Did it really take that long for the debris & col off. "?

"It certainly did. It was as if the day of judgement had come, that , was not ready for it, the horror and fury of the conflagration frightened me most, and as I said before it was as if the pit of hell had opened just where I stood ready to swallow me into it. During the horrible hours in that ravine my conscious too bothered me, afflicted me., my sins few if any but they came to my mind even though small. I wever saw such desolation when I left the ravine. It looked as if the world had been destroyed by fire. Trees still standing were smoking yet in places and , had even then though two days later a hard chance to avoid walking on thickly smoking embers. Nost of the trees have been burned lef leaving hardly not a trunk. Only here and there a more thicker tree stood smoking badly and ready to fall at any moment. For a while I was lost in this remains of the vinferno, and it was hours, and almost suffocuted with the smoke before I reached a point where the fire had not reached. Three days more and I had stumbled into the christian lines more dead than alive."

"Then" said general Hansonia" have you considered all those things?" "Yes. And they put me in hope, and make me cautious."

"Well keep all those things so in thy mind they may good thee on core correctly in they mission, and prick thee forward in any way you must go.

Then Walter starring prepared to go on his journey. As he was leaving general Hansonia said The Comfortor be alwade with thee, my good friend, to guide the three during your adventures. So Walter W Starring went on his way. He went up a long highway that was uite fonced in on either side by a long behavior of cence-He went on up this way believing he could recieve a wa view of the country, but it was quite difficult for the further up he went the steeper grew the grade. He continued on to till he came tward the near a summit, and he cure in reaching it recieved a good view of the country and particularly the forest fires. Walter was glad and lightsome, and and naid with a light heart;

"I have found the right heights at last, but nevertheless there is no sign of a glandelinian army now."

Then he stood awhile to look and wonder at the magnitude of the fires far away, for it was very curprising to him, that the sight of such a fire would meet his eyes. He then looked over his roll which he carried, and then he went on untill he came at the bottom of the hill, where he saw a little out of the way, six or seven men fast asleep. And walter seeing them lie in the path of the fire which will sen seen come upont one of his followers who came with him to away awake them. " But an they refused to head them he went up and cried;

"You fools are sleeping in the path of a forest fire, might as well be as if the dead son is under you, and a gulf that had no bottom. Awake there and come away, be willing or I'll have to force thee. If the fire comes this way you will certainly become a prey to the flumes."

For he was trubled to think that can should be in that kind of danger and not be in knowledge of it. So he fromly offered to offered to help this both by awakening them councelling of them. They took heed however and armos to their feet.

The first one who was awakened at first did not comprehend and said "There is no danger."

But Walters convincing words aroused them finally and continued on their way and with him. As this was accomplished he espied two men tumbling over a wall on the left hand of the narrow way and they made up apace to him and his men. With them were two women and some children. They draw up unto him, and Walter entered with them into discourse.

"Thence came you and whether do you go?"

"My name is Honricka Martinia" said the man who acted as spokesman. "We fled from the town of Melleglory and are fleeing the fire. Becauseful air. Clandelinians are rouming in this location"

"How came you not through general Hamonias lines, which is situated at the beginning of this way. Know you not that he could have given you refuge. We are on an adventure and cannot keep you along with us. And think of your children. If the glandelinians are reaming the neighborhood they'll marker your kids."

"I'm sorry sir, but it is tward general Concentinium A conburge army or Hunsonius for which we were heading. Therefore then sir, in our effort to make a short cut of it we must have lost our way."

"But will it not be counted too late to retrace your steps now, since you are of an Don't you think it is better to follow me and my companions a short distance untill we strike somecoholtor."

The refugess then told him that as for that, he needed not trouble his mind about, for what they did they had custom for, and could produce if need were testimony that would permit them to escape any foe necessary. But a if he did not mind they would be glad to accomeany him for a short distance."

"But " said Walter"Will your children stand the trial of such a long journey?"
They told him, that the children were hardy. And besides said they, "So we be get into the way of peril, what, a the matter which way we go? If we are in peril, so are you, as your adventure is dangerous too, thou; thou art but in the way of all kinds of greater peril which we would never experience. Therein now is thy condition better than ours. You are a opp, we are not. We have no reason to fear more than you. You seek dancer we do not."

"It is true" said Walter, but , walk through these perils at the request of the vivian Girl _rincssos, you were merely fugitives of the forest fires. You may stay in with any place of succor you come to, therefore I do not doubt that my dangers is somewhat greater than yours. You can come in to a christian camp without fear, while I have to face the open country alone in all peril untill what I seek after is accomplished."

To this they made him little enswer, only they big him, look out, be careful, and always keep praying to God for help. Then they went on, without much more conference with each other, save that the man alone told Walter That as to perils of forest fire, flood and the enemy they doubted not but they could as conscient-iously face them as he. "Therefore" said they we see not wherein thou could be much different from us, but by the coat that is on thy back, which was as we know did belong to a glandelinian general, given thee by a spy companion, to hide they real identy. If you showed your real uniform you could not dare go a mile in this dangerous and open country. But we believe your mission will not be a success, our country cause will not be saved, since glandelinia devastated our territiress with floods, fire and explosions, and has much of the country in her por "selent"

Wyou people talk that way because you are discouragean said walter. You advise my to keep on praying for success and yet say our cause won't sin. And as for this disjuise uniform on my back it was taken by , my saif, and I got a good one too. And

I take it as a token as a warning to me, as when I first stared out on my dangerous adventure I had nothing but my own uniforment had besides thus I comfort myself as I go on the adventure, and surely think when I come to the end of my mission, and succeed and return the christion generals willknow me for good, since I have his pass in my passesion. I have also a paper with a mark on it, of which perhaps no one has taken notice, which propore vivian himself first the obin the day that first was asked to do the work by violet and her sisters. I will tall you moreover, that I had then been given a rell scaled, to comfort me by reading and studying as I continue on my adventure, and which I also was bid to give in at general ivians I lines, in token of my containty of my mission being fullfilled, all which things I doubt you want, and wha want them because you need enter the refugee camps."

To these things they gave him no answer, only they looked at each other soberly, Then they continue on, save that Starring and him followers kept on before, who had no more talk but with himself concurring the master he was to perform, and that sometimes slighing, and sometimes confortably, also he would be often remaining in the rouli, by which reading he seemed refreshed.

Then they went on till they came to the foot of a large hill, at the bottom of which was a straim. It was a forceted hill, mostly pinon and fir. There was also in the same place three other roads, one turned to the left, one to the center and the other to the right, but the fourth led right up the hill. Starring and his compenions went to the apring to drink and refresh himself, and then they began going up the hill side. The refugence came to the foot of the hill. But when they saw that the hill was steep and high, and there were two or three other ways to go, that it was too steep climbing for their children, and bellowing that those three byways might meet again with that up which starring and his friends went, therefore they resolved to go by one of these roads, and by doing so they soon reached a large hamlet by which they reclaved hospitality by those within.

Starring and his companions, continued to go up the hill, sometimes they ran,, some times walked laboriously, and also were compelled to clamber upon their heads hands and knees, because of the steepness of the place. Once walter stumbled and fell but he rose again now abouthalf way to the top of the Hill was a large camp unseen up there there a camp of forest rangers. Not far from that camp was a resting place and a small shrine. Thither there for therefore Walter and his companions got, she where he and his companions out down to reat himself. Then he pulled his roll bout of his bosom, and read therein to his comfort. Thus pleasing himself with the scenery for a while, he at last fell into a slamber, and there into a fast sleep, which testined him in that place untill it was almost night, and in his sleep his roll fall from his hand anticed by his followers, inally at it grow darker one of his companions wishing to go on to sook refuge in the ranger camp for the night awakened him saying;

"Come on sir. It is time we were going sir."

Then walter started sulionly up, and sped on his way followed by his men, and it took him half an hour before he came to the top of the hill. As seen as he reached the top of the hill, there came sixty men and women and children running tward him from the opposite side. Well sire " said Walter to them "What What is the matter you are running to here like this."

"One of them answered, while the children were crying, that they were coming from a town, and had strove to got up this difficult hill but But said he The farther we go the more danger we most with, wherefore we turned and are seeking the help of the rangers."

"Yes" said another man"Fer just behind so and about twenty miles away, is two big fires advancing this way, whether really heading for this forested hill and valley below we know not, and we could not think if we came here not, but they would presently overtake as and descry destroy as all."

"Then" said walter "You make us all afraid, but what shall we all do, and where shall the pu population fly to be sufered and for heavens sake is all the forests in the country around here in danger. If we go back westward twend the other ridges we shall certainly porishe there. If I can get to general Johnston Manleys camp I am I sure to be in more safty there then out in the open it seems. I must venture however, to go elsewhere and back is nothing but death, to go forward is fear of death or disasters, but success if I try. We must of course warn the rangers; Ha they are observing the danger already."

Thinking of what he had heard from these men, Walter felt in his besom for his roll that he might study a map on it to make out his bearing, but he felt and found it no not. Then was Walter in great distress, and knew not want to do, for not only did he want that which he could use to relieve him in his difficulties during travel and which should have been his repuse into general Viviens lines when he secured the information he desired, butvif the enemy got hold of it all his oen own plans for his mission would be lost, and he could not dare proceed.

Hare Hore therefore he begun to be much worried, and knew not what to do, he questioned his followers but they had not seen it. Finally he decided that he had slopt in the resting place near a shrine that was on the side of the hill, and ga falling down on his kneed, he asked God to help him find it again, and then went back to look for his role. But all the way he went back, who can say what sorrow and agony and existy of mid "he suffered Semetimes he sighed, sometimes he swore, and sometimes he wept, and he would be ten chid himself for being so feeligh as to fall asless in that place, which was eracted only for a little f refreshment for his wearings. Thus therefore he retraced his steps, searching carefully on this spot, and and over at that epot, and looking on this side and that all the way as he went if happily he mind might find his roll, that had been his great guide and comfort so many times in his journey. He want on artill he commonwithin sight of the arbour again where he had slept, but that sight renewed his sorrow the mire, by bringing again even afresh the sleeping into his mind which made him lose his roll. Thus therefore he kept on bowaiting his aloop saying;

"Oh foolish wrotched must hut; am, that I should sloop in the daytime, that I should be so careless as to alog usid difficulties and dangers, how many steps have I took in value now. How for this foolishmess I am made to thread these steps with misery which I might have been treading with joy, had it not been for this foolish sleep, and how far how far I might have been by this time. I has made to thread those steps trice over which I needed not but to go ever but once, and now I am also to be in darkness for the day is almost opent. Oh that I had not slept."

Now in a short time he came buck to the arbour or renting place again, where for a while he came compelled to sit down and weep, but at last as God would have it happen, he happened to be looking sorrowfully down under the bench, t there he spied his roll with haste and trombling like a leaf he hantily enatched it up, and put it into his become. And indeed who can tell how joyful Walter Starring was, when he had recovered his roll again.

yor indeed this rell was the assurance of historicess in his undertaking, and for his admission back into the christian lines. Therefore he laid it up near his besom, gave thanks to God for directing his eyes to the place where it lay, and with joy and tears started again on his journey. But how minnimbly he went up the rest of the hill. Yet before he had finally reached the top.,.., the sum had began to sin in the west, and this made him recall the feelighness of his sleeping to his mind, and again he began to condule with himself;;;;;;;

"Oh thou foolish so sloop, ho; for thy sake I am to continue my journey inthese dark and dolenome woods. I must walk without the aid of these malight without the sunlight, darkness will evershade me, and I must hear the noise of many doleft doleful creatures flooing before the first because of my untilety sleepp."

Now also he remembered the story of other fagitives, how they were frightened at the sight of a new part of the forest fire adfanadvancing tward this hill Then said Walter to himsolf;

The course of these forest fires could be easily seen at night, but the fire is driving all kinds of beasts on the flight, and if any should meet me in the dark, providing they be welves or phanters how should "avoid them, especially if they be bears and wildcats, for they can climb trees as well as I.My bullets would not last long enough to combat the wild beasts..."."....."

Thus he went on his, but while he was bewailing his unhappy carriage, he lifted up his eyes, and before there was a very stately camp before him, it being a camping -1 place of the rangers. Therefore he made haste to go forward, that if possible he and his companions might get ledging there. Now before he had gone far, he entered into a wide ledge or passage, which a was about a furlong above or off of the guards ledging camp fire, and acking very narrowly before him as he went, he suddenly espied far off but close enough nevertheless two enforces no lengine in the way lying partly asleep. They were the True tarlow winged Taskerborians.

"Now" thought ha"I see dangers in trying to pass here. It's all right if y have on my purple uniform but with this gray coat they'll think I'm a glandelinian, and show hostility. Therefore he was somewhat afraid, and thought also to be go back to mether direction, for he thought it was certain death to go on in this direction, but us of the forest rangers percleving, that Walter and his comrades made a halt, and acted as if he would go back, cried to him saying;

"Is thy uniform gray. If you are not really landelinians fear not these Blengins for they are not boobs and can tell who you are despite your disguises. If you are real glandelinians then keep back but if you are not come forward for proof to us for only young lengine can be fooled by gray uniforms. Instincts of the big ones tell what you are despite the uniforms. Anyhow keep in the midst of the path, and no burt sharll shall come unto you. But if you are glandelinians we will ourselves not allow you here."

Then Starring and his comrades muttering a heart felt prayer continued on, tremb ling however for fear of the Tuskerherians, but taking good heed to the directions of the guard, he heard them flap their fings with a roar but they did not come and do any harm, though one of them gave forth their siren like roar, Then he thanked Godthat the creatures know he and his comrades and their character despite their uniforms, and went on, till he came and stood before the camp fire, where the guard was. At this moment there was a terrible noise like the roar of a thousand aroplanes and the two creatures seared high up into the sky and flor away.... Then said walter to the guard.

"Sir if this is a rangers camp, may , and my comrades camp here for the night?"
"This" is he answered. We are stationed here awaiting to see if the fire comes up to us. We are sont here to head it off." Then the guard also asked who he and his compani ws were companions, and whether he and they were going.".",",...,"

"I am out to find general Johnston Jacken Manleys armies, as I believe he knows something about the originator of these war disasters and I am bound to find out, but because now the sun is sotting, I desire to lodge here to night with my compunions if you do not mind."

"What is your name?"

"My name is Wulter starring, one of the generals in general Viviens army."
"But how does it happen you come so late. The sum is now setting."

"Wall" said walter" at my first setting out, I had hopes of accomplishing my missipn, and nee unless that is done I fear Calverinia will perish or our cause will suffer a collappe or me overthrow..."

"These were my feare too" said the boyscout, but who but God alone can hinder that disaster which is threatening as."

"Well my boyecout friend." said tarring. "Let us leave such amp easant thoughts and speak of things that are more of our own adventure. Tell me now Radeliffe, if you say that's your name what you and your girl companion have met with in the way of the forest, for I know you two might have met with some things, or else it may be a sort of miracle if you did not."

"I with violet, and her disting and many of the others who accompanied them into the glandelinium camp escaped the first that i I perclaved all but destroyed all his all hi tets, and get out of its terrible path without danger, only afterwards, I met with some man that warned me before, run into a place which was likely to hive done me and the girl scout some mischleft."

"Ult is well you escaped the conflagration" said Starring. I recieved some news by whreeless, when I was at Concentinian Arrenburgs army that general Vivians and his brothers arabes were hard put to it by the fires, but their armies escaped as you did, but it had likely to have cost the two armies the loss of a terrible number of men. But what did he warn you off?"

"for are not thinking, even thoughper know comothing, what devorating diesetem disasters are associate the calverinism and other states, and as danger lurked secretly in many places this man who was a scout laid at a hard to be careful where I and my girl scout companion sont, warning me that the forcet firs it sell is tricky and that even where none appears one would show itself before we ever thought of its presence. He told me he was a withings of all manner of dangers.."

"That does reasonable" anid Walter. "But did he not warm you whether enemies also may be liking in the forest s."

"Yes. But he said the hidden Glandelinians are not so greatly feared as the cutactrophes raging. He told me I would not be of a good conscience if I would at will ri run y sirlscout companion into the same dangers if I refused to take hed head magnif."

"Thank God you have socuped the dangers so far of what he warned you of. I never such saw such devastations yet."

"May" said Radeliffs, "I know not whather I will wholly escupe the horrors yet. The fire is raging all over like as burning world."

"Yes, but you did not refuse to take his advice."

"No I took heed, for to committ sucide is to drive yourself body and soul into hell. So I looked out for myself, and for my girl companion, and we continued on our sourch. We have gone for many miles and met with no fees yet."

"It sooms as if glandelinia has taken hold of Hell and harl it upon as from below" said the girl scout."

"Did you meet with any one also iruing during your search for me.?!!!!"""
"When I and my girl companion mounted a great hill which everlooked the smeking and seething hell herror of imperial valley and other distant hills and plains, I met with a large number of gangers, the leader of whom at first being suspictions of our gray uniforms asked who we were, and whether bound. We proved to nim our identity, and then he said to me:

"You children look too young to go out in such a dangerous territory. I asked him his name, and what he and his own men were doing out in the same kind of territory. He said his name was Hans torio Frant, and that his men were all his followers. I asked him then what was his work, and he told me ho was a Forest Ranger, and that he and his men were out scouting on the territory in danger. I further maked him what what of a signal station he kept, and what other fire fighters he had so he told me that his signal station was maintained on a high treeless summit of a big hill with all the necessary mense means to warn towns and villiages in the path of the flames, and that he had hundreds of followers. Then I asked him how many Rangers and persons were fighting the fires He had said that he had over three hundred of his own gange out, and he told me that people of many towns went out to help but the fire had gained such headway that it cannot be stopped."

"Well" moked Walter, and what conclusion came the Ranger leader and you at last?"

"Why I at first found myself somewhat inclinable to go buck at his advice, for thought that he gave me fair warning, but remembering the words of Viclet and her sisters not to give up under any conditions untill, found you I felt it come burning hot into my mind, that, would be acting contrary to their wishes my best tho danger."

"And then?"

"Then it came to my mind, whatever he said, and however he gave warnings, if I abandoned my search for you, I would not be obeying the orders of my best friends the Vivian Girl Princesses. So I bid him to foreboar to talk any more on the subject, for I would not give up my search neigher fo for the same reason, my girl of friends. So I told him my mission and that I would not give p no matter what companion, as I must find you and guide you through the danger zone ... Then he told me if anything happened it was my own fault, but just the same he would send a number of the Rungers to chains me and Angoline, that should come to our assist ance if we ram into great poril, so , turned to go away from him, and just as we turned turned to go, he said "God Take care of you two on your journey. Then we went on our way up the hill Now when we were half way up, there was a terrible rour like a cyclone coming, and saw one of those forest fire equalls coming our way, swift as a terrific harricane, and it overtook as just about the place where we could have a grand view of the conflagrention. It soumed as if the whole world are noise. and confusion."

"just on one hill" said Starring," did I see the first overwhelm the Imperial Valley and cross Sound Band. I falt app ran apprehensive for general Vivians army." "But general" said Reicliffe, hear" hear me out---nee son as so soon as the fierce winds evertook us, a big branch tore away from a tree striking both of us. and down it knocked me, and laid me for dead. When I was a little come to myself again, I aided Angeline to her feet for the too was atwented and while I did so, I was struck another almost deadly blow on the breast by a flying piece of wood. which harled me down backwards, and , relied part way down the hill, Angeline following after me. I was not stammed this time, but this time being sheltered here from the terrific gale that was growing stronger and even sweeping small stones from the ground and hurling down whole trees, we remained untill it absted some what, dreading that the fire would come up afterwards like it usually to s, would which would doubtless have made an end of as, but that it fortunately went past us at another location.

Here we stayed for a long time. The windstorm and raging fires had increased to tremandous proprtions, the wind coming on like a harricane, and we could hear the gale coming over the mountains, and the frightful roar mingled with the horrid hissing snapping noise of flames and burning trees, and hundreds of explosions, was more terrifying than the scene, wondering what would ha happen next.

A big tree on the nummit went first, tearing the brunces of other trees to pieces as it fall, and small stones flewchefore the wind in sheets. Other trees snapped the broken ends touring down other smaller trees as they went down. Fortunately for us the trees fell one by one, so as to give us time to seek better shelter. It was all we could do to accomplish this, for by this time the fur; of the wind hot as a desert air was such that no could hardly manage even so small a thing as moving a inch to the danger of exposure, and the hail of flying stones, broken branches and heavy down was impossible to face, even with goggles for protection.

. It seemed that for a time no sort of safty was possible, we began to regret not taking the ran ere rangers advice. During an im intermit ent full we got up and went to a large rock to keep free fo from the storm. A few minutes later a whole sa swarm of smaller trees before cit very faces were term away, leaving a gap between us and the shelter. It s did not seem possible that any tree could endure the strain that came from the wind. The stanes were harled against them with the noise of a hailstorm, and the impact was so heavy that our bodies would not tolerate the pain if trying to keep to the north side of the shelter, we exposed ourselves to the flying showers. Once in a while the hall of stones that would great us cannot be imagined. It could not be endured on or flesh for I an instant. It hurt clear through ar clothing, Many of the stones were asclarge as walnuts, and muny armed with shurp corners that made them terrible missles. The stones began to collect allaround us, in our hair, down our necks, in our pockets, in our surs, in our noises, in our othe mouths, everything was permented with it. Boon it was six inches deep around so. It was suggested by Angeline that we crawl into a gully to escape the flames that follow this fire hurricane, but I reminded her that such places was a collecting place for durt and small stones which would hail down on us in greater quantities than ever, so we agreed to stick it at as long as po possible, praying forvently for an abatement.

The nearest possible refuze for us two, was at Rockglen, about ten miles down the valley The wind was so fierce that at best we had very little control over our body movements, and we did not dure to flee down through that muze of smoulder ing fires beyond. How we watched the diminishing shreds of our little shelter and counted time against the wasting fabric. Gould it shelter us untill the wind grew weak enough to allow us to floe. Time and again the wind would pick us up as we braced our backs unitedly against the wall of the rock, and roll us into a pile inthe middle of the little culvert of rock. I sut on a flat log of wood probably weighing more than a hundred pounds, alongeide of which lay a rock nearly as heavy as I am, yet the wind when coming our way repeatedly picked up the whole, I richee log and rock, and all -- and rolled us back and forth like balls. Angeline Riches with characteristic self sacrifice, chosed the most exposed end of the line despite my protests. She drew a cunvass tarpaulin she had brought with her over her head and shoulders in a vain effort to mitigate the blust goon it was the only protection she had, and for some time she sat practically outside, while the flying, rocks were hurled all about her and driven down her neck. he must have felt terriby terribly warm, hot rather, but she did not once complain.

.I went outside deciding it was little worse than within, for there one could at least move around. So though Riches was fearful of being blown bol bodily into the nearest section of the terrific forest fires it was agreed agreed that the

I time had come when we must try it down a mafer part of the valley. We more then terriffed and almost changed our minds for we saw a great trens carried bodily, by the wind. weeling that it was the atmost importance for saftys sake that the two of us keep together, I made frantic efforts to detain Riches who was rasher than I'm but she was gone like a ghost in the nighttt night beyond recalll out of earshot almost at once. To face the gale was atterly impossible, so I started backing tward the wall of the shelter, bracing myself against the wind ... guddenly there was a stronger gust thun ever, and i mad immediately I found myself flying through the air, scared almost to death. I shall nover forget the feeling of joy I experienced, when my face landed in the mark, two gullios away, .

My fact kept on and nearly turned we another grand and "beautiful" somersault, but I was cafe on the ground again. The foo ling that I was being carried bodily 9 Into the air down the valley by the wind was indeed one of the most unusual unusual and terrible experiences I ever had.

After that I decided it was as alone to try and find Angeline by any other means than to try to catch her and slow her down pown the hill I spet, carried by the wind, with little chance of even making a choice of my course or speed. In the distance . sped a long wall of swiftly forward moving smoke as fierce in rolls as a long terrific crater of a big volcane in the crazingt eraption. I knew , must avoid I must avoid this branch of the fire if I were to live. By desperate scratching, I munaged to deflect my course a little, but slide by so close to the conflagration that my clothes smoked from the heat, and had their been enother gust, such as has picked me up come just then. I could not have avoided it.

detected Angeline pichoe, and I soon caught her and proceeded down the b valley in somewhat more corderly more orderly if not the less precipitate facilion.

The hot winds came obliquely over a long flaming mountain range, so that it was extremely difficult to avoid being drifted out into the middle of the valley, whereas safty required us to keep to the west in order to make the ford, above the point where the main fire was passing. If we missed the ford our flight would have ended in a cul-desac among the some of flames, where we would have perished,

Finally we came to a pot where it was too low for the wind to reach us, and finally we were dayed. But it dure was a trying experience, though to tall the truth it only lagred for us fifteen minutes from the start as far as we can guess. It sure was the worst time for us,"

"If that fire had overtaken you during the wind, you two would have been loot" said Sturring. "It was not the first time that I even come near being caught by the fires. Three or four times I too had narrow escapes, Even many friends had come to me and told me that I would cortainly port h perish if , did not leave the fire zone at once. But before you got caught in the winds of the fire, did you not see whether you were in danger or not."

"Yes, and the coming of the wind too, but we had no time to do unything. It wan was about noon, and because had so much of the day before me, I had becomded to the hill top to get a view of the fire. And the Ranger had told me to forbear. I did not believe him at first, but since our experience we are more careful from now on. The winds that overtook us was a swing of of the fire hurricene, it sparse nothing in its path, and it was only by luck of chance that it brought no fire upon us.'

"It was only an offfling of the harricane that overtook you." said Starring. "I know it very well sir, it was not the firstytime that we observed the fury of one of those fire winds which proceeds the advence of such a blaze But pray tell me did you meet no on in the valley after your tryingexperience !

"You I met with some other rungers, who would willingly have persuased me to to go back with them, as they said the whole country was toeming with partle He told me moreover that to go on was the way of do the worng things is making such risks, and that even my superior generals would be much offended, if if I and Angeline ichee made such a fool of myself as to wade through this fire periled valley."

"Well, and how did you answer him?"

"I told him that although great perile did attend our journeying, and that rightly rightly (for indeed I just had hed one trying experience in that wind) yet since I once set out at the wishes of wielet, and her sisters, I could not turn back until untill I satisfied their desires. I told him moreover that as to the dangers in this valley he had quite misrepresented the thing, for there was more danger up on the slopes and summits on hills just now than in the valley, Therefor ; said to them that , would rather with her take the chances of going through the valley, to accomplish my own mission for them, than to take the chances of remaining up on the slopes and , then told him of my experience on the hill in that big fire wind, and of our narrow escapecof being blown right into the fire."

"Net you with any one else in that valley, that tried to turn you back for fear of your safty!

"Yos" said Radeliffe, I met with some Christian lone scout, but of all the men that I have met with so far, he , think is as persistent as a leach, the other would be said may, after a little argu mentation, and somewhat else, but this lone scout must have seen more of the dungers than , believed as he rouned around the country everywhere in search of means of making all the truble trouble for the enemy poenible."

"I inderstand" said Starring. "And what did he say to you?"

"What did no cay! Why at first he acked me where I and the girl scout were going, and when we told him, he objected against it all, all the dangers we would face, he said it was a piti mitiful low, sneaking business for any me like children to be sent out on missions in such most dangerous territory, that who ever ordered us to do it ought to have a better consciones conscience, and that the one who sent we should watch over his own words and ways, and go himself, not to sent two children out into such a dangerous country, and that even if we did fail it would make the sender the ridicale of all times. He objected also, that but few of even the mighty demini and Christian spy agens agents, strong or wise, were ever of their opnion of sending out children to do dangerous stunts, nor any of them neither, be fore they were persouled to be fools, and to be a of a voluntary fondness to ven ture on adventure on the chances of loss of life, health or limb, for any one else knows what. Also again he obke objected to the base and bw attitude and condition of those who sent children out on a dangerous spying mission, and also their ignorance and want of understanding in all that should be done, especially that we If we had to be gent out should have a strong body guard. Yea he did hold it at that rate also about a great many more things than hore, relate, as that it was a charac that we went through an experience already, as he could see by the appearan appoarance of our clothing which were burned to into holes. He said that also severe adventuers makes a persons heart grow hardened, and that we would we could or would go to it so far that if we perished we could be accused of a metual sucide."

"Well, what did you may to him?" "At first" declared Radeliffe I did not know what to say to him Yea he put us to it so, that my blood came up in my face, and had almost beat me quite off. But at last 1 began to consider that which is highly esteemed among Our pleased Lord Himself, and all the mouvenly most is had in good reward with God and His Blessed Mother themselves. And I thought again, that this man does not know who send us, that the mission we were said to be on by him was not so, and he said nothing, what Abbieunnia or Her cause needed. He did not think at the time. And I thought also that if things keep on going as they are now with di diseater upon diseater, follow ing one after another in awfil magnitude and so quickly and in endless succession, the day of Doom for the southern Abbicumium states will come, and we shall not meet a terrible defeat according to the condition of things, but according to the drain on the people and resources of the nation by these catastrophes. Therefore thought I , what God, thinks and says is best, what lolet and her sisters decides to the own will, though he might not see it at I did. Seeing then that violet and her sisters know best, and hew what they were doing, and seeing that if , did not find you and your followers and knowing the country guide you out of the Red Plugue Zone then something would happen to you that we two would be entirely responsible for I knew and so did he that landelinia was an enemy even to the Salvation of souls of child slaves, a abonimation of a fee of our Dear Blessed Lord,, and therefore everything must be done to put her in her proper place.

I argued with him ,telling him that the Vivian girl Princesses sent me to find general Starring, at indeed, could scarce chake him out of my company, yea he would be haunting of me, but at lest told him twee in w vain to attempt further in this business, for those things he disdained, in those did su see success for our cause,, so at last , made him desist. and when he saw himself worsted, he told me that I can have it my way then, but that he would have as many Masses as possible, and Litanies said, to insure my safty and success".

"I am very glad my boy, said gtarring, thatbyou did convince him so that h he gave up, for of all as you said, I think he did not understand your mission, and yet he is so bold as to scout on the for averywhere at a greater risk than he thinks for himself, with the hopes of pitting the enemy to shame before the whole world, but let us still be careful ourselves for he scouting so much sees more danger for us than we even think, for notwithstanding all we went through, we have more yet. His having passes said for us will help us along. But did you meet no on

"No not I, and we kept a wide stretch between us and all the fires for the rest of the way untill we were hailed hailed by you. We often cried for help from Heaven to help us find you, and you found us."

"IT was very well for you, but I am sure it fared far otherwise with me.I and a large force of angers and citizens from near by towns, as soon as 1 almost entered the Imperial Valley a drea ful combat with the flames. I thought verily the flames would have go e gone far beyond us and trapped us, especially when we saw it heading at terrific fury tward the clearing we made. But we all cried to god and His Blessed Mother, and they heard me and "e delivered us all out of our troubles for the fire did not come tward the clearing. Then entered into another part of the vallsy, and had nothing else but perils from fire for almost three quarters of the way through it. I thought I should have perished there over and over, but at last a glare as bright as sunlight broke through the walls of blackrolling smoke, and having went through the rest of it without much more peril. Yet it appears as if Holl itself was changing places with the earths surface."

"Then "said walter; "gince you have found me now, are you going back to the christian lines, or going with me on the adventure?"

"We were anked vi by Violet, and her sisters to help you to do the very same

"That is fines cried Walter, then ; will also have the good company of you and your girl friend....

"Yes." said angeline Riches. "With a very good will we will be your companions, and also guides."

"Well" suid walter, let us go altogether, and also let us spend our time in talk ing of things that are more of benefit to us."

"Yes, to talk of thee things that are of the best results, to us is very good with you sir or any other, and therefore I and the boy am glad that we have met withthose that incline to so good a conversation. For to speak the truth, there have been but too few that had ever desired to spend their h their time, as they are tracking traveling for adventure, but choose much rather to be talking of things which would not be of any profit to the cause, and this has been very troublesome and discouraging to me. "

"guch things like that is to be homented" said walter. "por shot things so worthy of the cause of country now a days as are the things concerning our poor suffering Calverinia and other states of southern Abble annia."

"I like you wonderful well" said Angeline michee, for your speech is full of conviction,, and will add what thing is so sad, and yet so amprofitable to the enemy as to devastate so crually by disenters like we observe now!"

"Yes, yes, go on."

"That things so sad and doleful. That is if claudelinia had any delight in wicked things, and love to make horrible disasters that even also are unusually marvelous and wonderful, for instant if claudelinia delights to make a new history, or chance the mistery of things resulting from great disasters whe by her, or if alundelinia does love to destroy millions of homos, cause out or cause the breaking at of out of miraclous explosions, that produce telling earthquake shocks, ernormous and wonderful floods, or signs of other disasters, and devastate an ernormous magnitude of countryside with forest fires, where shall she finds things recorded less terrible in her own country, as when some day our own armies would have the opportunity to make an invasion into her own territories?"""""

That is a question that is tru, but to be profited by such things in our talk should be that of which we also design."

"That is it that I saids declared Angeline pichese, for in our cause, and for the purpose of our adventure to talk of such things is most profitable, for by so doing, you may get knowledge of many sportant things, as of the dangers of our strange expeditions, and the benefits of what happens if we succeed in the mission this in general, but more particularly, by this we all may learn the necessity of accomplishing our efforts to a lotter T the sufficient of our efforts, the need of gods help in our purpose and of doing it rightly , cautlously, celever cleverly bravely not rashly and foolishly. Bosides by this we may learn what it is to do out duty, to believe we, il succeed, to pray for success, to go through our adventure no matter what we suffer, or the like, by this also we may lourn, what are the great results of our success to our comfort worther by this we may learn to refute fulse opinions, to vindicate the truth, and also instruct those who help us."

"All this is true" said Angeline Richae,, a"And I am sural, glad to hear those,, thingsefrom you. But also, the want of this is the cause that so few understand the net need of faith in the rangers and forest fire fighters who are swarming to the work, and the necessity of a desperate work of all able bouled cities and towns in order to overcome those fire and other disasters, or prevent them in the future in the loust,, but ignorantly do not try such means jet, by which our Government by no means overcome the horrors.""

"Yes,yes,go on." said Starring.

"All this know very well, by experience by studying conditions after the great dispetors, for our government can accomplish nothing, except help be given it from Our Blossed Lord -- all help is from there alone, humanity in this case is powerless, all is such crace, not works and battling alone, I could give you a hundred scriptures for the confirmation of the fact that faith in Prayer and good works will accomplish great help from heaven in a time of need like this,"

"Well then"said gtarring"what is those things that we shall at this time find our

"Thatever you will I should, I will talk of plane, to frustrate the enemy in making disasters in the future, or things concerning floods, things imoral done by the enemy or things like massacres, things sacred profuned by them, of disasters past, and of probabilty in future, or other horrors to come, things to result for our cause in the struggle, or things concerning these forest fires, things more essential, or things circumstantial, provided that all be done for the profit of our cause."

How did Starring begin to wonder, and stepping to Radeliffe, for the had rode all this while by himself, he said to him but softly;

"What a brave wise intellegint girlscout for a companion we have got. Burely this Ittle girl scout will make a very excellent guide for me."

AT this Rudeliffe modestly smiled, and said;;;;;; "This girl scout with whom you are so takenesir will some day be a good help to us a11."

"Do you knew her?" asked sturring surprised.

"No hor. Yes better than even violet and hercoisters knows her he themselves" "Pray who, is she!"

"Angeline iches. A professional Girl acout and spy and everything else for various christian generals here and there."

"What else is she."?

"A professioonal girl guide as she knows all of the country like a bird." I "Indasd.'

"Yes, I repeat her name is Angeline Richee, nearly as beautiful a child as some of the Vivian Cirls, a great favorite of all the Princesces, and girlscout leaders, and all bands of girl and boy scouts and the armies together, and , wonder that you should be a stranger to hor, only , consider that our armies are large."

"Whose daughter is she?" asked Starring.

"Those parents are here no one knows, jet neither has she ever been a child slave. and now she is know of all that are acquianted with her by the name of Angeline, Richees, and nothwithstanding har a retty ways, her features, she is but a sorry girl to the enemy. Next to Certrude Angeline the is most drewied. To capture her seems impossible, and no ones needs help her either."

"Well, said gtarring " she scome much less than that to me, though she is a very pretty little girl."

"She is to them that have not been thoroghly acquainted with her, for she is to all her followers the best friend and companion known, when spying and doing other work on the enemy she is egly and fiercer than a young tigress, your saying that she is not as serious as she looks, brings to my aind what I have observed in the Vivian Girl princesses. They appear like children afraid of a kitten, in fact if there is anything they really are afraid of I do not know what is is it is."
"But" continued gtarring "I um ready to think you but just jest, because you smiled"

"God forbid on this occuanion that I should be jesting, even though I might have smiled, in this manner, or that , should try to grains or flatter her behind hr her back, I will give you a further discovery of her. This girl scout is for any ones company, or for any adventure, as the had talked now with you so will she talk, when she is with the Vivian cirls, and the more you ask her to do the more she does, fear of any dangers had no place in her heart, or conversation, all she says comes from mind and heart, and all she does, and her adventures have been numerous and nearly always successful. Of all girl hereines in our country the biggest reward is offered for her capture by the glundelinians alone. Ind yet no one dares to lay hands on her child though she be. She is good at her gunning telieve me and she can he show you amything kind of pistolry and masketry shooting you ask. As for horseback riding she can beat every girl and boy scout in the whole christian army even the Vivian Girls thomselves."

"Buy you so. "woked Starring. "Then in this girl scout , um greatly in need of?" "Greatly win need of, you may be sure of it. Remember the proverb of these ind of things. She does more than she says. She talks of making a successful stying expedition on the enemy, of getting out their plane, or information, and secures more than she said she would. Once accompanied her on an expedition and she told me she was going to secure an envelope from general , anley, which had semething important-1 de did not believe she could do it. She later came back to me, she had the envelope, eix important letters, written to the Glandelinian Government, wanleys most expensive dress uniform and hat, and spurs, an elegant hat, and a map. I have been with her on other spying expeditions, and have observed her both in ganlays lines, and abroad, and I know what , sa, of her is the truth. Even Violet or her sisters will confirm what may There is no peril that the chirks, there is neither fear nor sign of repentance of what she has done to the enemy, yea the enemy fears her more than even the powerful gemini si spice. She is the very stain, ra reproach and horror of the Glandelinions who know her, they hardly have a good word for her .Thus said the Glandelinian generals who know or knows her" A saint within the Christian armies,, a devil spy among us, the landelinians finds her everywhere doing them things they droud, and they cannot capture her. Christian officers that have any dealings with her say this better for the enemy to meet with a young hostile plengiglomenoon preuture than with hor, for fairer dealings, they shall have in meeting it. This girl scout, if it will be pesible, will go beyond the . ferocity of a Rebonnia, and they cannot do a thing Besides she brings up her boy and girl scouts to follow her footsteps, and if she finds any of them timid or cautious, she brings it at of them by strict and severe but kindly training. For my part, I am of opinion that she has by her daring life caused the wicked Glandelinia cause more ruin, and will be if she continues on with Gods help the ruin of the wicked cause to a finish."

"Well my boy, I am bound to believe you, now only because you say you know her, be but also because like a w' or lad you make your reports true. For I cannot think you speak these things because you desire to secretly do her honor, but because it is even so as you say."

"Yee " suid Radeliffe, "Had I known her no more than you sir, I might perhaps have thought of her as much as at the first you did, you had she recleved this report report at the hands of only beguiled flutterers, I should have thought of it to be nomothing to fl fourflusher her about, but all these things, yeu and a great many mure as good, of my knowledge, I can prove of her. Penides all Glandelinian generals are afraid of her as a scourge, a plague they wished to avoid, they can neither call her a human being or a dangerous child spook, the very numing of her among them makes them confused if they knew her."

"Well i see that saying and doing are two things, and she observes this distin ction to a perfection .

"There are many things she observes, that Abbisannia's cause is a Holy Cause, undef iled before the world, before God and Him Plesned Mother, a patien that aided others in distress always, a nation full of children never doing wrong anywhere, no one fighting or swearing at each other, everyone keeping a amepotted. This she is aware of and though she admits she is not an Abbleannian by 1 birth but of some Irish of descent, yet she thinks that Abbiermia is not deserving of all this trouble, and thus she decides to do all one can. Hearing is but the sowing of the seed, and yot she talks a lot of what she will do, and does sometimes a quadruple more. She proves by action that talking is not sufficient to prove that fruit is indeed in the heart and life. The end of the world is compared to this forest fire, and yet she pulled me at of all its parils, and talked .. let about it first so much had , not know her , would have believe she was only talking. I speak this to show you how significant the profession of Angeline miches is. If she could not be trusted if she only was a Talkitive, Violat and her sisters would not have trusted her to go out on this mission or accompany you as a guide when we found you. One day reme remember rightly she spoke nearly four hours of purposing of going out to the out kirts of the enemys lines to learn what the enemys next move would be. Anyone from her constant talking would have said"She talks a lot but she:11 never do it. She went out to confirm all her talking. That day she saved general vivians army from disaster. She discovered ten times more than she even talked about.

"Well, said starring, this brings to my mind that of many friends, by which they described the opy is that is always successful Sha is such a one, she says she will do it, she socks knowledge of what the enemy is doing, and therefore does it to such perfection that she spreads torror among the enemy."

"you have opoken for aught, know, the true mense of those words, and I will add another thing " said Radeliffs. The Vivian Girl Princesses trust the her with eve y everything the; ish. Therefore she is a great scout believe me."

"Well" said Starring, "I was fond of her company at first, but I strongly desire it now. What shall we do to have her aid me in my work."

"Take my advice, and do as I bid you sir, and you shall find that she will be willing to do anything you ask."

"What would you have me do?" asked gtarring."

"thy go to her and enter into some serious discource, about the nature of disasters, the power of ar own cause, and ask her plainly whether our overrment can avoid such dreadful scenes in the fure future or not."

"Then Starring rode forward again, and said to Angeline liches !

"Come what cheer. How is it now!"

Thank you sir, very well indeed. I thought we two should have had a great deal of conversation by this time."

"Well" said gtarring , " if you will we will full to it now, and since you left it with me to state the question, let it be this; "How does it come the enemy had such easy chances to cause these disasters, when it is committed in the heart of the Christian Country."

"I percieve" said Riches that our talk still must be about disasters, and the powerful results of them, well thi tis a veey vgood question, and I shall be very willing to answer you. And take my unswer in brief thus. First when the govern ment is overconfident, it gave the enemy a good chance tolesp in. Secon ly

"Nay hold, said Starring let us consider of one at once. I think you should rather may, the disasters showed through the overconfidence of not only the government but the people in general, not thinking to abhor the near approach of the for."

confidence of the Government, and people."

"Oh a great deal " said starring" Our government was overconfident because they it did not believe the enemy could not do it, nut neither could the reople be on ther their guard against the coming of it, or do anything to avoid against it, I have been in some big cities already and heard the whole population cry out vehemently against the glandelinians for the horrid disasters they have caused,, no one who have have read the news of the floods, disasters of explosions, terrible massacres of c. children, and forest fire terrors and heaven knows what could stand it in their hearts, and the conversation was rampant everywhere, went through the streets. or into a house to see friends. The scenes of excitement caused by these disaster news resembles the horrors of the terrible granch Revolt or "Reign of Terror me avery one cried at torrible curses against Glandelinia, and no one can count the numbers who either stormed the Druft Boards or Recruiting stations for entrance into the army, and either failing because there is no room to admit so many at once, or before they are too young or old, have formed armies of their own and selected their own leaders to go and fight landelinis If Clandelinia does not have a down full in the near future she never will ... "" "

"You have then had more exp riences that I have had † percieve" said Angeline

"No not possibly I" said sturring." I am only for setting things right. But what a 18the second thig thing whereby you would prove a discovery of works that would role a licenery of means to frustrate the lemys propose of making other such dinanter."

"That, said Angeline michee" is the great knowldge of christian spies in finding out and knowing what the enemy would be up to next.

"This should have been attempted first, f but first or last, it is also now too late, for knoweldge of what the enemy does or can do, great knoweldge may be obtained by only moune of great rick, and yet many cannot a obtain such means as it seems utterly impossible. Yes if there can be epies that have all knoweldge, he may yet to successful, as long as he asks the help of god and trusts in his works. When general Vivian said to me "Do you o know how to accomplish the mission the Princeges have set you on. "I had answered yes" and the general added "Well blesse blessed are you and the Country too if you succeed in doing it. He did not lay the blessing to the catcome of the country's cause in the knowing of what my mission is going to be, but in the guecessful accomplishment of it. A man may know how to make a mission of my kind like an ag angel even, and yet be no successful means to do it, un ess he had the tarlent of doing it it-You are se of the spies who says you 11 do it, and you do. For there is knoweldge that is attended with what you do, you know your ways and you do it. Indeed to know a thing, and to do it pleases both country and god. Not that any one need to accomplish anything good for the coungr countrys good by knoweldge, for without bravery and carefulness all attempts to learn anything gore for naught, therefore it is best also to k have good sound knoweldge. Knoweldge that roots in the bare speculation of all things, and knoweldge that also is accomplished with the grace of Faith in Gods ' helping in the advent . ures, which puts any spy or scout or agent upon doing anything they set out for accomplishing, the first of these will serve the Country and God best. Give me understanding of my works, ad and will accomplish all with my heart.

"You are talking with good sense." said Angeline Richee.

"Well if you please, EPrp profound another sign how the enemy can be prevented from making further disasters," said Starring,"

"Not I. "said Angeline Richee. "It is beyond me, even though we must agree to the help of God as you say."

"Well if you cannot" said Starring," will you give me leave to do it!"

"You may use your full liberty" said Angeline pichee."

"The work of many good spies, discover many things that could astonish any one, or christian generals the selves. To him it had it thus, ; it gives him conviction of the nature of the enemy,, especially of the defilement of the Glandelinian nation, its wickedness,, and the sin of massacre and committing unecessary devastation-for the sake of which she sure is to be defeated in the near future. This sight and sense of things workes in him sorrow and shame for the deeds against his beloved country, he finds moreover, revealed to him the Savier of the World Re-Crucified by Clandelinia, and the absoluse necessity of trying to rescue Him before it is too late, at which he finds causes a defeat terrible to Clandelinia and so on. Now according to the strength of the Abbleannian Covernment itself, so is the Emperors joy and peace, so is his love to His country and her holy cause, so are his desires to know it more, and also to cerve God more and more in this world. But though I say the situation of all is discovered to him, yet it is but seldom thay that e he is able to conclude that this is the work of his spies and agents only because his many other spies now, discovers all other corruptions of Liandelinia now, makes his and to misjudgovthis matter, therefore in them that has accomplished this work, there is required a very sound judgement before he or they can conclude with steadiness, that this is a work of great accomplishment. To others it is thus discovered; By an experimental of is faith in Christ helping him through his tak tasks tusks. By a righteous life answerable to that profession, to wit a life of holiness, heart holiness, family holiness if he has a good family, and then with that condition Our pleased Lord helps him through his aventure adventure, as he should and would abhor all these terrible sinful things Glandelinia has done, as a saint should abeabhor his own sin, and to promote men of his own kind in his own command, not to accomplish things by talk only, but by a practical subjection in faith, and love to do duty to both God andc and Country. And now Angeline, as to this brief de discription of the work of spy accomplishment, and also the descovery of the right means of it, if you have aught to object, object, if not then give me leave to propound to you a second question."

Nay" said Angeline" my part is not to object, but to hear, let me therefore have your second question."

"It isothis" said Starring. Do you experience the first part of the description of such a spy or scout, and does your life and conversation testiay the same, or does your word mean as much as doing. I know you will not incline to answer me, in this, for anything that you can justify yourself in, approves of a good conscience therefore.. Pesides to say 7 am thus and thus, when my conversation and my friends tell me i doethas , speak, is great honor." For a moment anguline iches seemed to blush, but recovering herself she replied; "Youcome now to my own experience, and to make an appeal for justification of what I am. This kind of discourse I have expected right along, but for the sale of of my mission, cannot to save my own sa solf be disposed to give an answer to such questions in a section of country where , do not know people, because , count myself bound thereto to keep things a dead secret, unless you take upon yourself to be a mind reader, and read my mind. But some secret places I will tell you all But I pray sir will you tell me why you ask me such questions!"

"Because I saw you good and proper, and , knew that you had some characestiv that makes a good scout. Besides to tell you the truth , iss gichee, I have heard of you, that you are a girl scout whoses work lies in doing everything to speak of you intend, and thattyour conversation is the following out of everything you wish to accomplish. They say you are a tigress among Glandelintans, and that their generals fare the worst for your presence, -that many a glandel inian army tumbled into ruin because of your successful expeditions for our cause-and that more are in danger of being destroyed there, y, your spying work, and scouting, and investigating, and other works have brought great results for our christian generals. The proverb is tre truscof you, which is said" that a little girl scout called Angeline Richee is a greater terror to the enemy, than a young getennia Blengin, so you could also be a helt in my own mission."

"gince you have learned all that, I cannot but conclude, you have been worthy of my company, and so if that is what you desire, so be it.But if ; must be your guide you must therefore do all , ask and may, so that we may go it properly.'

As Starring went back to godeliffe the latter said;

"I told you how it would happen, your words and here has come to a good agreement, she would rather have your o company, but she is to be our guide, as I said- let her do as she knows right, otherwise the loss is none but our own, she has already saved us the trouble of running into dangers unknown, for her continuing, as I know she will do, as she is, it will be a bad blot in our company if she was not with us, besides best to have one who can do mything."

"I am glad" said Starring that I had this little discourse with her, it may happen that she will do wonders for us, however I have dealt plainly with her and so she is clear of our blood if we heed not her directions and perish in the adventure now progressing.

"Yes" declared Padeliffo"you did well to talk as plainly to her as you did, there is but little hope of accomplishing your plassion without her with, you and wielet, and her eleters, and also Certrais Angeline know it, therefore they sent her and me and that makes your mission safer if you follow her, for she is not vain in her conversation though to some she may appear directly talktive, for she is not only in word, though plenty is her words, yet still more her deeds, and she is strong and plain in her conversation, for she had stumbled the Clandelinian generals, blemin blemished their efforts, and grived their wicked cause. I wish that all spies could doul with the fee as she has don, so far, then the enemy would be giving up sooner, or the christian armies would be too hot for them... """

Thus they went on riding their horses and talking of what they had seen by the way, and so made that way easier which otherwis, would no doubt have been quite tedious for the for t now the wilderness grew thicker in trees so thick that the forest on each side of the road was as dark as midnight...

The THE ADVINTUERERS COME UPON A CHRISTIAN ARRY UNDER GENERAL HO PO VIVIANIA. STARRING TELLS HIM HIS ALVENTUERE. AFTER LEAVING CAMP THEY GO THROUGH STRANGE INCIDENTS.

Now when they wave approaching a large clearing in this wilderness, Radcliffe chanced to cast his eye back, and espled a party coming behind at some distance and felt sure he knew them.

"Oh " said gadeliffe, to genering, end Angeline," look he is coming yonder..... The others therefore looked, and Angeline said;

"Why it is Jennie Turmer and Mildred Maxwell with a number of girl scouts. " "Aye and I did not expect them to follow una" said Radeliffe" believing they had remained with the Princesses" for it was one who suggested to Violet, and her sisters to find you."

Now when Jennie Turmer and her companions had come up with them, she saluted them,,, "god help you in your journey, dearly beloved, and un aid to your helpers, but also peace be to you."

"Wolcome , welcome my good girl scout, the sight 6 your presence brings to our rem our remembrance your good will and kindess and unwouried laboring for the good of our country and Its cause."

"And ax said starring himself::

"And a million, hundred million times welcome," as thr thy company, Fiss Turmer, how desir dise desirable to all uf of u : us."

"yes it seems to be" How had it fared with young friends, since the time of our last parting. What have you all met with,, and how have you gone through it all townsom Then starring himself to satis y the probable curiologity of the girl scout told her of all things that had happened to them since he first started out, and howeard and how and with what difficulty they had gotten to this part of the woods .. "

"Right glad am _ that you have progressed so for with success a in your undertaking" said jennigT armer and for that you have notwithstanding many difficulties, continued in this way to this very day even though I know many advised you against it for the perils you may meet on the way. I will also say right glam , am of this thing, and that for im mine can sake and yours, the enemy have sowed, and you have ulready reaped, and let us hope and pray that the day will soon be coming, when Abbieannia can rejoice with the world -- that is if you hold out on yout adventure for in due time you will and must succeed, if you do not give up. We had to leave off, Violet, and her sisters and the rest of us for the fires struck Manle, s cumps,, and stopped our efforts and drove him on a disorderly retreat but with Gods help success will be and is before you, so strive that you may succeed. Hany others have bem been that have set out to loarn the clues of the disasters which we have been sasking, but none have succeeded yet. Held fast therefore to your purpose, let no one interfere with your plans, you are not yet out of the gonshot of the demon fire either, you have not jet succeeded, striving in this purpose. Let the hopes of success urgo you en,, and bolieve steadfastedly that god will help you tru through. K Let nothing that is in your cause get in your way aless it be for you good, and above all look well to every part of the country, and to all the damersx dangers especially the forest fires for they are the worse above all things, and designably desperately dangerous, set your faces to the e task you have all power in heaven and within the christian localities on your side."

Then Starring thanked her for her exhortation, but tel told her withal, that they would wish her to speak further with them for their help the rest of the way, and the rather for that for that they well know that she also was a good scout, and that could tell them of things that might happen to them if they were not any too cureful, and also how they might resist and overcome many perils. no which also Angeline pichese consented. go Jennie murmer sais;; said;;

"Well no one can foresen anything that far" she answers but we all must go through through manybtr b tribulations paril before we can succeed in anything. And then you cannot go out on any kind of adventurecwithout there being some kind of excitement to it. You have found something of the truth of these kind of experiences already, ad and _ am positively sure more will immediately follow, for now as you see we are still in this welderness. We are also heading for a large christian army that is advancing this way to making a junction with noncentinian Arrenburg and viviananna Vivianaanna, which you will bye and bye see before you. As later on you might be everywhere at beset with perils and enemies, who will strain hard to either hinder your purpose or kill you you must have a force of retainers to guard you, but we must be faithful in all our work or otherwise there will be no success for our Countrys cause. But when you are come to the view of the army, and shall find it is the christian army I mentioned, for I saw it coming from the heights before I met you, then remember your friends, and on the future of the adventure let us all committ the keeping of our souls to our od in welldoing, us unto a faithful Cra Creator and a God Loving Country."

"I would have been here much sconer, but that through my fooliheness, I elept in the resting place near the summit of this hill, and even then despite that . would then have been here such sconer, but in my sleep I lost my roll, and came without it to the brow of this hill, and then when , felt for it and I found it was gone was forced with o sorrow and axi ani anxiety to go back to the place where I had it been alseping, where, found it. And now I have come up hore."
"Weil I will call out one of the lieutenants of this camp, who will if he likes your talk bring you in to the rest of the ranger force, and examine you according

So the guard shot off his pistol, at the sound of which, came out from one of the tents a tall stately man who asked why he was called. ttThetevastatt There was a few minutes of conversation between the guard and the officer, and then he said more loadly "This is general Walter Starring of general Viviens commands sent on a journey from general Vivians lines by Violet and her sistes to learn of something important concerning the flood and other disasters, but being weary from being a long fugitive from ferest fires, and probably shadowed by secret enemies he asked me he if he and his followers might lodge here for the night, so , told him , would summon you first, who after you have had discourse with him, my may do as you may think proper, according to the law of the Forest sanger Campe. The officer of the ranger looked him and his companions over very carefully, sized them up, and alter could see that the man was stern and rough in appearance. Then he asked in gruff tonos;

"From what part of general Pobertsonia Vivians army did youse came from, where are youse going, and wom nent youse!" "Starring told him in his military manner."

" Him, I see it. How did your yours find your way on this path?"

"I was directed by general Viviania and general "ansonia."

"Well that sounds pretty good for your wolds, what have youse seem and met with in the way?"
